Miss Rose Hamilton, comedienne, makes a great hit with her songs; Three Rameses submit a high-class statuary turn; Fred Casburn keeps the house in merriment; Miss Leah Arden sings classic songs with charming effect; and a similar turn is given by the Grosvenors. Stave, comedy artiste, is good; and the Bio. pictures complete the programme.

MIDDLETON.

PARDOE'S THEATRE.—Proprietor, Mr William Pardoe.—This week the attractive play Jack's Sweetheart is being well played by a good company. The drama, which has now become more of a musical comedy, is an exceedingly lively one, and Miss Gladys Silvester and Mr Fletcher Sansome invest it with everything that can please an audience. Mr Cecil Parke is a good hero.

MEXBOROUGH.

PRINCE OF WALES'S THEATRE.—Manager, Mr W. H. Melton.—Messrs Carson and Granville's company is this week presenting The Drama of Life. Mr Jerrold Ord gives a masterly interpretation of Harry Beech; the Walter Beech of Mr J. J. Hooker is a thoughtful rendering; as Sir Dobson Wilde Mr O. Redmonde is amusing; Mr Bulwer Pitt (Jack Lawton) and Mr L. Thackeray (Dave Crane) work most acceptably; Mr W. Steele capitally acts the rôle of the detective, Brenton; Miss Cissie Bellamy displays rare dramatic power and intense sympathy in the character of Sylvia Beech; and Miss Muriel Inglis is a capital Lady Jane Wilde.

MOTHERWELL.

NEW CENTURY THEATRE.—Managing Director, Mr R. C. Buchanan; Resident Manager, Mr W. Gillespy.—The Swiss Express has now arrived at this theatre on a premier visit. Messrs Charles and Frederick Renad in the parts of the two extraordinary footmen accomplish a lot of excellent and droll pantomimic work; Miss Marie Millward is charming as Virginia; Mr Wilford Bailey is droll as Professor Gull; Mr George Martin is clever as Bob Rollingstone; Mr Harwood Cooper gives a good display as Jack Gadabout; and Mr Alec Wylie is greatly appreciated as Dudley Green. Mr E. A. Cooke is well received as Mandarin Maza-Watte, and as singers, dancers, lance and sword experts Misses Rosie Chaldner, Dolly Payne, Hetty Coventry, and M. Cornish are extremely pleasing.

NEWPORT.

LYCEUM.—Lessee and Manager, Mr Sidney Cooper.—Mr J. F. Elliston's company, with In Old Kentucky, is fulfilling a week's engagement here, under the direction of Mr Charles Hermann. Madge Brierley is cleverly portrayed by Miss Amy F. Hermann; Mr Alfred L. Banks is quite irresistible as Colonel Pebley Beauchamp; Mr George F. Steel makes a capital Kentuckian gentleman; and Joe Lorey and Jasper Grafton are ably sustained by Misses Gerald Kennedy and Eric Hudson. Mr Harry Leander as Neb is particularly good; Miss Mary Clithson creates a favourable impression as Mrs Van Astor; Miss Beatrice Shirley makes a successful Barbara Grafton; and Alethea Harley is played by Miss Edith Halford with credit.

EMPIRE.—Moss Empires, Limited; Managing-Director, Mr Oswald Stoll.—An interesting programme is submitted here this week. The Wheelers, quaint cyclists, perform some daring and sensational feats; Albert Athas and Lizzie Collins in a musical act, are amusing; and the Two Bees, in Hiawatha, evoke hearty recalls. Jessie Albini a captivating little lady, in her descriptive song, proves attractive; Frank Maura gives a good exhibition of foot juggling; and Arthur Rigby, comedian, scores with his "lecture" on matrimony. Wal Pink and company, in Uncle's Wife, evoke roars of laughter; and Tom Costello, as popular as ever, makes a great hit with his songs, "What's the good of a ten-pound note?" and "You must be in the fashion," scoring a well-merited encore. The Baldwin Brothers, in a clever acrobatic sketch, complete the bill.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.

TYNE THEATRE.—Managing-Director, Mr F. W. Wyndham; Business-Manager, Mr Fred C. Sutcliffe.—Mr Tree's company is again appearing here in The Darling of the Gods, and the effect of this weirdly impressive play is accentuated by its picturesque setting and the distinctive incidental music. The part of Zakkuri is entrusted to Mr Robert Patemar, who portrays in vivid colours the crafty, remorseless nature of the Minister of State. Mr Gerald Kay Souper bears himself with spirit and manliness as the soldierly Kara; Miss Frances Dillon succeeds admirably in depicting the varying emotions which exercise the love sick Yo-San; Miss Eve Muriel's acting as Rosy Sky calls for commendation; Mr Kenneth Black makes a dignified Banza; and a good performance is that of Mr Hubert Druce as Kato; while Mr Douglas Payne's appearances as the dumb servant are always effective. Mr Ivan F. Simpson as Saigon and Mr Arthur Vezin as Tanda Tanji render good service.

THEATRE ROYAL.—Managing-Director, Mr Robert Arthur; Acting-Manager, Mr F. Teale Lingham.—A return visit from Mr George Edwardes's company, in The Orchid, is attracting crowded audiences here. The production is staged in Mr Edwardes's very best style, which means a lot, the two principal scenes being remarkably pretty. Miss Coralie Blythe continues to give her songs with delightful piquancy and point as Lady Violet Anstruther. Miss Irene Verona as Caroline Vokins has a style of part in which she always shines. Wholly charming are the acting and singing of Miss Gertrude Gilliam as Josephine Zaccary, and the characteristics of the French girl, Zelie Rumbert, are neatly brought out by Miss Ethel Griffies. Miss Luna Love makes a smart Thisbe, and the Countess Anstruther has a dignified exponent in Miss Katie Leechman. Mr Lawrence Grossmith now appears as the Hon. Guy Scrymgeour, a part which he portrays to the enjoyment of all, and his "Lancers" song and accompanying dance is a particularly clever effort. Hearty amusement is also to be derived from Mr George Gregory's droll performance as Meakin. Mr Donald Hall contributes a neat embodiment of Dr. Ronald Fausset, while Mr Ellis Ogilvie, whose features are certainly remarkably like unto those of a celebrated statesman, does capitally as Mr Aubrey Chesterton. Dancing of a distinctly agile and nimble description is a factor in Mr Sidney Vincent's success as Zaccary, and Mr Sam Walsh affords amusement in the duel scene as Count Raoul, his seconds being well represented by Mr E. G. Woodhouse and Mr F. Rutland.

"NOTHING LIKE VI-COCOA TO PREVENT FATIGUE."

Mr. L. J. GUNNELL, Acting and Business Manager, Musical and Dramatic Agent, 104, London Road, Portsmouth, writes:—"I am not in the habit as a rule of giving testimonials of any kind, but must really send a line in praise of Vi-Cocoa. I have just reached home after nearly three months' pantomime tour, mostly through Wales. Weather vile; the whole time pouring with rain, and depressing atmosphere. My days were very long and work hard, but on my return to my lodging every night I never under any circumstance missed my 'night cap' of Vi-Cocoa in preference to spirits of any kind, and after the fatigue of the day it seemed to put new life into me. My company mustered nearly sixty, and I recommended it to most of them, and I know the majority of them adopted it—even so far as having it made at the theatre as a refresher between the acts. Rest assured I shall speak highly of it."

Palace Theatre.—Managing Director, Mr T. W. Rowe.—A change from the customary round of drama is provided here by the appearance of Messrs H. B. Levy and J. Walters' company of juveniles in the pantomime Beauty and the Beast, and the bright and attractive performance given has afforded pleasure to large audiences.

New Empire Palace.—Resident-Director, Mr Richard Thornton; General Manager, Mr Frank Allen; Resident-Manager, Mr E. Leslie Conroy.—Charles R. Sweet, the musical burglar, is entertaining audiences here with his amusing patter and musicianly skill. A capital comedian in Harry Dent is singing two songs, wherein he furnishes fresh proof of his comic ability. The sketch, The Cheerful Idiot, is presented by the Tribune Trio, who introduce smart contortionist business, laughable acting, and songs and dances. R. H. Douglass displays his undoubted comedy powers in one of his witty monologues. Brown and Le Clerq appear in one of their familiar yet always amusing sketches, and Katie Holloway's style is better than her singing, while her dancing is best of all. Bicycle acrobats in the Tourbillon Troupe perform some risky feats in smart style. Clever duettists and dancers in the Sisters Lonnen make a successful appearance, and Ted Cowan is a capable comedian. Fred Ginnett, with his Rejected Remounts sketch, provides capital entertainment.

Grand Theatre of Varieties, Limited.—Managing-Director, Mr Sidney Bacon; Acting-Manager, Mr Ernest W. Bacon.—One of the best turns yet seen here is that of Theo Okito, in his wonderful Chinese magical wonder act "Watch Me." Another capital turn is that of Captain Devereux and his clever dogs, who, in the sketch The Canine Streets of London, show the perfection of animal training. Martino, a contortionist, is clever in his sketch A Nest of Vipers. The Sisters Brenton are refined duettists and capital dancers; Jack Mansfield is a versatile comedian much above the average; Ike Scott and Son, old favourites, are as good as ever; the Dugros Trio are very smart gymnasts; Happy Attwood is a novel comic singer; and last, but not least, is the turn of Grant and Allen, two smart comedians.

Olympia Theatre.—Lessees, Messrs Thornton and Bacon; General Manager, Mr Sidney Bacon; Acting-Manager, Mr Nelson Barry.—The familiar and popular play It's Never Too Late to Mend is being performed here by a company under the direction of Mr John Wainwright, who is again signally successful in the part of Tom Robinson, and the support all round is good.

Pavilion Theatre of Varieties.—Managing-Director, Mr Thos. Barrasford; Resident-Manager, Mr Will H. Boardman.—One of Mr John Tiller's most successful sketches, High Jinks, is being performed here. Jessie Tempeton appears to the best advantage as Mrs Jesmond Dene, acting and singing in first-rate style; Mary Ann is amusingly presented by May Sharples; and Emmie Franks is also prominent as Priscilla. Among the comedians Bob Selvidge and Freddie French take leading honours. In the variety company proper Dave Marion scores his usual success in his "Walk" song; Hurman is a smart juggler and wonderful hoop manipulator; a pleasing turn is provided by Virginia and her piccaninnies; Mr and Mrs Paul Knox appear successfully as society entertainers; Marie Elsie displays cleverness as a comedienne; and Harris and Worth, talking and singing comedians, are also programmed.

NOTTINGHAM.

Theatre Royal.—Managing-Director, Mr Robert Arthur; Acting-Manager, Mr Howard Finney.—The visit of Mr Wm. Greet's company in the late Mr Wilson Barrett's last play, Lucky Durham, drew a large audience on Monday. An exceedingly fine representation of John Durham is given by Mr W. F. Grant, an experienced actor, whose dramatic force and discriminating discernment enable him to portray the part with the necessary fervour and sympathy. Miss Phyllis Relph brings a charmingly natural method to bear on the rôle of Helen Vallerton; and her interpretation throughout is excellent. Mr Henry De Solla is incisive and thorough as Lord Mountfallon; and Mr Daniel M'Carthy acts crisply as Richard Vallerton. Mr Paul Belmore limns to the life the insipid and brainless character of Reginald Steighton; and a dainty embodiment of Margaret Steighton is submitted by Miss Jessie Winter. Miss Mary Relph is responsible for a fine histrionic effort as Lady Mountfallon; Miss Nellie Bonser makes a tender and winsome Mrs Durham; Miss Frances Irving is an attractive Mrs Devianne; and Miss Gertrude Robins acts with grace and refinement as the Duchess of Hovecourt.

Grand Theatre.—Manager, Mr Chas. P. Cooke.—Mr F. S. Gilbert and his opera company remain another week, the large audiences evincing nightly their delight and appreciation. The operas staged included The Bohemian Girl, Satanella, Il Trovatore, Maritana, Fra Diavolo, and The Lily of Killarney.

King's Theatre.—Proprietor, Mr Frank Macnaghten; Manager, Mr A. W. Bull.—Mr W. A. Armour's company works energetically in the musical drama, What a Woman Did. Mr Armour cleverly undertakes the rôle of Conrad De L'Orme; Miss Phyllis Atherleigh as Elsie De L'Orme is a sympathetic artist; Mr Kenneth Smith makes a success as the conventional villain; Mr Will Simpson plays agreeably as Fritz; Mr Owen Edwin is a conspicuous character as the hunchback, Pitou; humour is to be discovered in Mr Cyril Dundas's quack doctor; and Miss Nita Imeson deserves praise for her dancing.

Empire Theatre of Varieties.—Managing-Director, Mr Oswald Stoll; Acting-Manager, Mr Hatton Wharton.—The premier position here this week is shared by Marie Kendall and Dutch Daly. Miss Kendall's vivacity always commends itself to Nottingham audiences, and her success is as great as ever. Dutch Daly's manipulation of the concertina is clever, and his racy stories evoke much laughter. Juan Caicedo's expert display on the wire draws forth the greatest admiration and applause. Mabel Hind sings a Japanese song tastefully, and Lawrence Barclay has a parody on "Little Yellow Bird," which evokes the utmost merriment. Goggin and Davis are the quintessence of humour, the juggling performance of Zarmo gains by his large fund of humour, the Milons submit a smart athletic item, and the Maningoes show wonderful powers as equilibrists. Steve M'Carthy is suitably rewarded for a song.

NUNEATON.

Prince of Wales's Theatre, Ltd.—Managing Director, Mr A. F. Cross; Acting-Manager, Mr Walter J. R. Bryan.—Messrs Beaudyn and Livesey's company is here with A Beautiful Fiend. Mr Montague Beaudyn's impersonation of Ivan Paulovitch is praiseworthy. Mr Herbert Skardon is well suited in the part of Count Fedor Karateff; Mr A. F. Budley is good as Sergius Strogoff; Miss Sidney Crowe acts in a masterful style in the title-rôle; and Miss Irene Munroe in the part of Nadine is interesting and sympathetic. Plenty of fun is supplied by Mr Charles Kean as Christopher Crackles and Mr Robertson Foulis as Malachi, their efforts being well appreciated. Miss Annie Clunn makes the most of the part of Patey Woodlands.

PLAYERS OF THE PERIOD.

MR. ROBSON PAIGE.

Mr Robson Paige was born in 1862, and being the bad boy of the family he, of course, went to Australia. Naturally he took to the stage, making his first appearance twenty-one years ago in a pantomime with Mrs G. B. Lewis in New Zealand. He enjoyed having his teeth extracted by the clown and the lather brush pushed into his mouth so much that he thought he would seek another engagement, and made his way to Melbourne. There after some time Mr George Rignold engaged him for Called Back, and when he played Varmaloff with a gruff voice in a fur-lined coat and slouch hat, and the boys made him up he thought he had found his vocation at last, and had discovered an easy and short cut to fame and fortune. Alas! that was twenty-one years ago! But when a few weeks later he played Anthony March and had to strike Mr George Rignold, as Macari, with his glove, and when he came off Miss Kate Bishop and the others said "Bravo, little 'un," he fairly danced home, but Varmaloff never appealed to him after that. Mr Paige continued with Mr Rignold some time, playing many small rôles in such plays as Henry V., Lights o' London, Romany Rye, My Partner, Faust, &c. Then came several engagements up country in For the Term of His Natural Life, Arrah-na-Pogue, Uncle, Mixed, and Bad Lads, and again in Called Back. Next Messrs Williamson, Garner, and Musgrove engaged him to play in Jim the Penman, The Candidate, Forbidden Fruit, Dark Days, and Harbour Lights. In the last-mentioned companies were artists like Robert Brough, H. P. Vincent, Pattie Brown, and poor Phil Beck. Returning to England armed with letters from Mr J. C. Williamson, Mr H. H. Vincent and Mr J. F. Cathcart, Mr William Duck engaged him to play Martin Bassett, in Hearne's Oak (comic opera). Then he appeared with Mr D. E. Bandmann in his ill-fated production of Dr. Jekyll and Mr Hyde at the Opera Comique. After that Mr Paige went on tour to play Dan'l Jaikes, in The Silver King, under Mr Charles Dornton's management. Then came an engagement with Messrs Cuthbert and Cobbe to support Mr William Rignold as Downey Bleater, in Nowadays. He next played Batty Todd, in The Middleman; Jasper Phipps (Mr J. L. Toole's part), in Walker, London; Stout, in Money; Netherley, in Jim the Penman; Tom Dutton, in The Trumpet Call. Mr Abud next engaged him to play the Rev. Mr Bagot, in Trilby, to Mr Laurence Irving's Svengali. Mr Ben Greet engaged him for the rôle of Glabrio, in The Sign of the Cross, and he appeared as Captain Cruickshank, (Mr Alfred Bishop's part) in Rosemary, and again as Jaikes, in The Silver King. Then he created the part of the Rev. Dr. Dullamere in A Wanderer from Venus, for the late Mr Robert Buchanan, who highly complimented Mr Paige on his conception of the character. Amongst other engagements he played Joshua Gillibrand, in The Arabian Nights; the Rev. Dr. Dozey, in The Silver Shield, with Miss Maude Millet and Mr Walter Everard; Angus M'Allister, in Engaged; Jean Ricordot, in A Man's Shadow, with Mr Acton Bond; Poppleton, in The Gold Craze; Juffin, in Aunt Jack; Moses, in The School for Scandal; Henry Bassett (title-rôle), in The Sleeping Partner. Then Mr Paige made the biggest hit of his career, Miss Mabel Syringa giving him a contract for life. Mr Frank Curzon then engaged him to support Miss Marie Tempest, Mr Frank Cooper, and Mr Ben Webster as Depuy, a short, showy part, in English Nell, at the Prince of Wales's Theatre. A most delightful engagement this after touring, as it ran six months without a break, and, of course, no weary Sunday travelling. Then Mr Yorke Stephens engaged him to support Mr James Welch and Miss Fanny Brough in The Giddy Goat, at Terry's Theatre, where he also played Benham, in The Lady Wrangler. Mr Paige was next engaged to create the fine part of the Rev. Oswald Baxter, in Dr. Nikola (adapted by Messrs Oswald Brand and Ben Landeck), at the Princess's Theatre. He also created the part of Crump, in Mr Henry Dundas's production of Shadowed Lives, at the Kennington Theatre; Sugarman, in The Children of the Ghetto, by Mr Israel Zangwill, at the Adelphi Theatre; Latimer, in The Vanity of Youth, in which Mr Acton Bond and Miss Jessie Bateman played the leading parts, at Wyndham's Theatre. Mrs Brown-Potter engaged him to create the principal comedy part of Mr Elmsdale in the Vicar of Gorleston's play, For Church or Stage, so that his recent engagements have all been creations, and vastly different, with the exception of Tweedle-dum and the Mock-Turtle, in Alice in Wonderland, which he played at the Metropole, Camberwell. Jaikes, in The Silver King, and Captain Cruickshank, in Rosemary, are the kind of parts Mr Paige prefers to play, as they contain touches of pathos as well as comedy, and are, he thinks, more human than most of the comedy and character parts written; but a constant change of parts is the one thing to be desired, and Mr Paige hopes that a return to stock seasons, with modern plays of course, may become general throughout the country, whereby managers could effect a great saving in fares and printing and the public would have an opportunity of seeing their local favourites in many varied parts. This system he ventures to think would mean increased business and satisfaction to all concerned. Mr Paige says that during his career he has received many acts of kindness and much encouragement from those with whom it has been his good fortune to be associated, and it is to them, he modestly adds that he owes whatever success he may have achieved.

MISS ENID ROSS.

Miss Enid Ross started her professional career under the management of Messrs F. H. Macklin and Peter Davey in A Midsummer Night's Dream, playing Hippolyta and Oberon. After this came a good deal of hard work, which soon resulted in engagements for leading parts in Two Little Drummer Boys, Cissy (two tours), and A Woman's Honour. She was the Princess Corona, in Under Two Flags, Miss Ida Molesworth and Mr Mark Blow's company; Diana Chesney, in The Sorrows of Satan, Mr Drew Mackintosh's company, and Peggy, in A Brace of Partridges, Messrs A. E. Anson and R. J. Danson's company. She was re-engaged by Miss Molesworth and Mr Mark Blow for their répertoire company, and returned to Mr R. J. Danson's company to play Peggy, in A Brace of Partridges, and Mrs Mildmay, in Still Waters Run Deep. She played the lead in Mr Arthur Carlton's stock season; Maria, in Wanted, a Baby, Mr Laird Bennie's company; Minnie, in The Man in the Street; Lucy, in A Pair of Spectacles, Miss Beatrice Howard's company, and lead, in Mr Leonard Mortimer's stock season. Originally intended as an artist, Miss Enid Ross occupies a great deal of her time in painting. She studied under the late Mr Irving Montague and was one of his most promising pupils.

MR FREDERICK JACQUES.

MISS ALMA EVELYNE.

Miss Alma Evelyn commenced her public career as a concert singer, appearing with great success under the bâton of Sir August Manns at the Crystal Palace, at several of the promenade concerts, and in London and the provinces. She then turned her attention to grand opera, enlisting under the banner of the late Sir Augustus Harris, and going through a long tour in America with that delightful opera Hansel and Gretel, being one of the eight young students from the Royal College and Guildhall School who were taken over as understudies. Miss Evelyne has sung the rôle of Mother several times in the same delightful opera. She then fulfilled engagements with Mr Oscar Barrett, Mr G. B. Phillips and Mr Ben Greet, including a long tour through South Africa in 1899 with Mr W. J. Holloway, singing the solos in As You Like It, and The Sign of the Cross, appearing in various rôles in comedy and tragedy. In 1901, she had the offer to create the part of Madame Jan in the comic opera The Fisher Girl, which she did to the entire satisfaction of the management. She was especially re-engaged to resume her part, and is earning well-deserved praise for, combining concerted music with broad low comedy. She shows her versatility as an actress. Miss Evelyne has a very powerful voice with a range of two-and-a-half octaves, and is to be praised for her clear enunciation. She shares the privilege with a select few of being able to sing the National Anthem, and opened the County Theatre, Reading, for Mr Milton Bode, and the Hippodrome, Stoke-on-Trent, last Whit Monday. Miss Evelyne's great hobby is music, and over that she waxes enthusiastic. She is a brilliant pianist and excellent accompanist, reading at sight. In private life Miss Evelyne is the wife of Mr George Leslie Bannerman, barrister-at-law, of Gray's-Inn and the Middle Temple.

MR. FREDERIC JACQUES.

Mr Frederic Jacques was born Oct. 10, 1864, and educated at the North London Collegiate School and King's College, London. He was then articled to Messrs Beyer, Peacock, and Co., locomotive engineers, Manchester. Having been for ten years a member of the Hermits Dramatic Club, Camden-town, he made up his mind to try his luck on the legitimate stage, first of all by obtaining a small part, thinking it wiser to begin in this way and "get on," than start by attempting to play a leading rôle and "get off." After writing to many managers, one letter turned up—"Please be at the Surrey Theatre, 12 o'clock, Monday." He turned up, and there met Mr William Bourne, who, after a chat, handed him a minor part (about half-a-dozen lines), of a railway signalman in Man to Man. He rehearsed there and then, and went on at night, this being his first appearance close upon twenty years ago. He was given a better part in a fortnight, for when he made his first appearance in the provinces at the Theatre Royal, Portsmouth, he played the policeman (a good responsible part). He remained with Mr Bourne for twelve months, and since then has played many parts and stage-managed many plays, in London, the provinces, and abroad under many managements, among them being Norman, in Messrs Howard and Wyndham's production at Glasgow Theatre Royal of The Lady of the Lake, then a round of responsible parts in a répertoire of about seventeen old English comedies with Mr Edward Compton (Compton comedy company, followed by an engagement to play Jorkins, in Jerome K. Jerome's New Lamps for Old company). Then came an engagement to play Nicholas Lynch, in This World of Ours, by Seymour Hicks, in which Mr Jacques was his Cockney accomplice in crime, produced in Mrs Nye-Chart's time at the Theatre Royal, Brighton, July 20, 1891. Next came a tour in The White Lily, an American drama, known in America as The Prairie Flower, under the management of Colonel Cody (Buffalo Bill). Then a tour of Husband and Wife, in which he played Inspector Thickhead, under the management of the late Harold B. Nelson. It was during this tour that Mr Jacques married Miss Minnie Rayner, who has worked with him ever since, without one or two exceptions. He then went with his wife to South Africa, to join Mr A. Bonamici (the Lyric Opera Company). Arriving there Nov. 18, 1892, and during their joint engagement there he played a répertoire of twenty-one comic operas, burlesques, &c., his parts including Pedrillo, in Pepita; Raker, in Blue-Eyed Susan; Guron, in Princess Ida; Rocco, in La Mascotte; William, in La Cigale; Sergeant Caromel, in The Old Guard; Lay Brother Pelican, in Falka; &c. On returning to England in June, 1893, the late Richard Edgar engaged him to play the Jew character part (Peter Screw), in Nance, in which the late Miss Marriott appeared in the title-rôle. He then went to the Princess's Theatre to stage-manage Odette (adapted from Sardou's play by the late Clement Scott), under the management of Madame Anna Ruppert, also to stage-manage the production of Robbery Under Arms for Mr Alfred Dampier, after that, joining Miss Annie Oakley (the champion lady shot of the world) to play the Irish comedian's part (Larry M'Ginnis), in Miss Rora. In 1895 he joined Mr Lionel Rignold to stage-manage and play Christopher Dabney, in the farcical comedy, All the Comforts of Home, following that by playing Captain Halyard in Messrs Mackinder and Wingfield's burlesque The Water Babes. His next engagement was with Mrs Lancaster-Wallis to play Brooke, in The Pharisee, and this was followed by an offer from Mr Frank Wyatt to play Wilkes, in The Two Johnnies, by Mr Fred Horner, at the Duke of York's Theatre; then came an engagement at the Princess's Theatre and in the provinces with Mr Charles Warner to stage-manage The Streets of London, Never too Late to Mend, and Drink, also playing Poisson in the latter play. In 1897 he joined Miss Adria Hill and Robert Ayrton to play Dick Chilton in the late Henry Pettitt's Adelphi drama, A Woman's Revenge. Then came a tour in the musical comedy, That Terrible Turk (Odoardo Barri's company), in which he played James Lovebird. This was followed by an engagement with Mr Hardie and Miss Von Leer, to stage-manage and play the pawnbroker in How London Lives at the Princess's Theatre and the provinces. In pantomime Mr Jacques has played Idle Jack in David James's production of Dick Whittington at the Ealing Theatre, 1893; Ibrahim in Blue Beard, with the late Mr W. Revill, Theatre Royal, Stockport, 1895; Abanazar in Aladdin, with Messrs Bailey and Oliver, West London Theatre, 1896; Genie of the Ring in Aladdin, with Mr J. F. Graham, Prince of Wales's Theatre, Birmingham, 1901; Demon in Aladdin, with Mr Robert Courtneidge, Gaiety Theatre, Dublin, 1902; the Baron in Mother Hubbard, with Mr Rich Waldor, Princess's Theatre, Glasgow, 1903. Mr Frederic Jacques is now playing Joly, the stage-manager in Zaza, with Mrs Lewis Waller; he also stage-managed its production at the Broadway Theatre, New Cross, in September, 1900, and the first provincial and suburban tour. He has now held this engagement with Mrs Waller, both touring and at the Royalty Theatre, for four years (with the exception of pantomime engagements for which Mrs Waller has always kindly released him). This is his present and last engagement up-to-date. He terminated a four years' engagement in Zaza last September, and he appeared as Fader, in Mrs Lewis Waller's production of the Russian play, Vilma, produced at the Queen's Theatre, Manchester, Oct. 3, 1904.

THE "BULLOCK" VERSION.

In the Court of King's Bench, on Tuesday, before Mr Justice Phillimore and a special jury, an action was brought by Mr John Pitt Hardacre, theatre proprietor, against Mr Frederick W. Purcell, Mr H. Armitage, and Miss H. Wright, of the Marlborough Theatre, Holloway, for an injunction restraining the defendants from producing the Bullock version of East Lynne, of which the plaintiff alleged he was the owner, and also for damages. Defendants denied that the plaintiff was the owner of the play they had produced. Mr Shee, K.C., and Mr Morton Smith, instructed by Messrs Smiles, agents for Mr J. H. Cooper, appeared for the plaintiff; while Mr Montague Lush, K.C., and Mr J. R. Atkin, instructed by Mr J. Moberly Sharp, represented the defendants.

Mr Shee, in opening the case for the plaintiff, said this was really an action brought to restrain the defendant, Mr Armitage, from producing the Bullock version of East Lynne, of which the plaintiff was the owner. Many years ago Mr Chute dramatised the novel "East Lynne," but it was not a success. Later he introduced the comic character of Police-Constable Bullock, and from that time the play apparently became popular. Several leading actors and actresses had taken parts in the play, including the late Mr Wilson Barrett and Miss Heath. In August, 1888, the play was assigned by Mr Chute to the plaintiff, with the condition that Mr Chute and Mr Wilson Barrett should be allowed to produce the play without the payment of a royalty. The plaintiff alleged that Mr Armitage had produced his Bullock version of East Lynne without his permission, and that he was entitled to damages and an injunction.

Mr W. Robinson, an actor, whose professional name is Leonard Yorke, stated that he was well acquainted with the plaintiff's version of East Lynne. On July 26 last he attended the Marlborough Theatre, Holloway, and saw the plaintiff's version produced. There were, of course one or two alterations of dialogue.—In cross-examination Witness said he had never heard that the part of police constable Bullock was a part worked up by George Barrett, the brother of Mr Wilson Barrett. He did not know that the Bullock version of East Lynne was produced in 1866.

The plaintiff stated that he had been connected with the theatrical profession for twenty-nine years, and that he first began to play East Lynne about 1886 or 1887. The piece when he first played in it had not the part of Bullock in it. He acquired Mr Chute's rights in the play, and since he had been the owner he had had to take proceedings against seven or eight persons. The titles of the acts—Temptation, Through the Fire, Retribution, and Atonement—were introduced by himself. The part of Bullock was material for the success of the play. The foundation of Mr Wilson Barrett's fortune began with East Lynne.

Mr Atkin, for the defendants, denied that Mr Chute was the auther of the part of Bullock in East Lynne. The part, he said, was in existence as far back as 1866 or 1868. The late Mr Wilson Barrett used to produce the play with the part of Bullock in it, and no proceedings were taken during his lifetime.

Mr H. Armitage, manager to the late Mr Wilson Barrett, stated that at Christmas, 1903, Mr Wilson Barrett asked him if he could do anything to provide for the poorer members of his company during the vacation, and remarked that he had a version of East Lynne, which could be produced. Mr Wilson Barrett took the old manuscript and rewrote the play. The part of Bullock, which was in the old manuscript, was reproduced in the new. Mr Wilson Barrett subsequently made substantial alterations in the play. He rewrote the comic scene for Bullock, and struck out the old-fashioned gags. That was the version which the plaintiff alleged was his property.

The case was resumed on Wednesday, when further evidence was called for the defence.

Mr Stafford Smith, an old actor, having been on the stage for sixty years, said he had acted the part of the comic policeman in East Lynne over forty years ago. He did not remember the constable's name, but it was either "Bullock, X.Y.Z.," or "Mutton."

Mr Atkins—How many years ago was that? The Witness—I do not know exactly, but last Sunday my wife said to me, "Do you know how long we have been married?" and I replied, "Yes, just forty years." When I acted in East Lynne I wat a single man.

Mr Armitage, one of the defendants, was further cross-examined. The witness said he was theatrical manager to Mr Wilson Barrett during the last few years of the latter's life. The witness considered that the introduction of the comic constable Bullock into East Lynne relieved what was an otherwise gloomy piece.

In the result the jury, after deliberating for an hour and an half, returned into court and announced that they were unable to agree. They were then discharged.

PORTABLE THEATRES.

To the Editor of The Era.

Sir,—Before the Blaina Bench, on the 21st inst., a local test case came on concerning portable theatres. In this case the building had passed the county surveyor, and the manager, Mr Edward Ebley, had received a licence and a renewal of same, for a further term, from the county authorities. The local board, who brought the case forward, lost the day, but intend to proceed further. The principal point seems to be:—Have local boards the power to impose the same stringent rules on portable buildings as on permanent ones? If so, they have the power to enforce their bye-laws on all travelling shows, auctioneers' tents, the circus, in fact, any temporary erection to which the public is admitted.

This is a matter of great moment, and affects thousands of people connected with the "Showman World." If local boards or county councils have power to exact in portable theatres brick foundations, corrugated iron roofs, &c., which it would be impossible, absurd, and ruinous to comply with, the showman's "occupation's gone."

Yours faithfully, SCISSOR POLE.

THE DRAMA IN PARIS.

"LE MARQUIN,"
Comedy, in Three Acts, by M. J. Berr De Turique, [Produced at the Palais-Royal, on Oct. 20.

Lucien Maréchal	M. RAIMOND
Bachorelle	M. CH. LAMY
D'Eclanchettes	M. TRÉVILLE
Isidore	M. HAMILTON
Célestin	M. ORSY
Destany	M. JULLIEN
Madame Lecardon	Madame BERTHE LEGRAND
Germaine	Mdlle. AIMÉE SAMUEL
Estelle	Mdlle. SUZANNE DEMAY
Madame Baschorelle	Madame RENÉE BUSSY

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

PARIS, THURSDAY, OCT. 27.—Half comedy, half vaudeville, M. Berr De Turique's new play met with a cordial reception. The plot is not very complicated. Madame Germaine, Maréchal's husband, is a deputy, and she is anxious he should become Minister. Lucien Maréchal's ambition, however, does not run in the same direction. Good-natured and indolent he dislikes politics, and remains deaf to Germaine's entreaties to prepare the speech which is to make him Minister of Fine Arts. Gentle means having failed, Germaine adopts another course, and in a violent scene with her husband not only raises her language to a high temperature, but smashes a few works of art in the drawing-room. All in vain. Lucien flatly refuses to prepare his speech, and goes to see Estelle Lecardon. Estelle is a young ingénue, fresh from the Conservatoire, anxious to be engaged at the Comédie-Française, and who called with her mother on Lucien to secure his influence with the authorities. Her large eyes have made a deep impression on the Deputy. When Germaine hears of her husband's infatuation for Estelle she is delighted, for she is convinced that this damsel will succeed where she (Germaine) has failed in forcing Lucien to prepare the great speech. Germaine therefore calls on the Lucardons, and, thanks to a few banknotes discreetly slipped into Madame Lucardon's hand, secures both mother and daughter as her allies, Estelle solemnly pledging herself not to grant Lucien any favours until he has finished his task. And everything would have gone well if Lucien, in order not to be recognised, had not donned a false wig and beard. When Estelle sees him she takes him for Oscar, her first passion, the only man she ever loved, and she succumbs. Lucien remains with Estelle for a couple of days, and then returns home with his speech in his pocket. But Germaine has grown wiser, things have turned out altogether differently from what she expected, and she now works as hard to prevent Lucien from becoming Minister as she did to secure him the post. Lucien, too, has received a cold douche. His fancy for the frail Estelle was only a passing one, and he is anxious to resume his calm existence which Germaine very unwisely interrupted. The piece was fairly well acted. Mdlle. Suzanne Demay was excellent as Estelle, whose sham modesty and pseudo-timidity she brought out to perfection. Mdlle. Aimée Samuel was a conventional Germaine; and M. Raimond did not vary his style to which we are now accustomed. It is to be regretted that those two clever actors MM. Tréville and Lamy had no opportunity to display any talent in their insignificant rôles.

THE Lamoureux and Colonne concerts have begun, and the organisers promise us many novelties this season. Let us hope there will be no repetition of the scenes which disgraced many of the performances last year.

"PAR LE FER ET PAR LE FEU," Drama, in Five Acts and Eleven Tableaux,
by M. Maurice Bernhardt,
Produced at the Theatre Sarah-Bernhardt, Oct. 22.

Zagloba	M. F. HUGUENET
Bohun	M. DESJARDINS
Duc Yaréma	M. LAROCHE
Jean Krétuski	M. DECOEUR
Longinus	M. DUREC
Michel Wolodowski	M. SCHELER
Rendiane	M. PAYLAGARDE
Mosiek	M. LACROIX
Princesse Kurciewicz	Mdlle. JANE MEA
Princesse Hélène	Mdlle. G. ROBINNE
Basia	Mdlle. CERDA
Xénia	Mdlle. MARGA

Neither at the dress-rehearsal nor at the première of M. Bernhardt's new piece was I able to understand a word of the story founded on Sienkiewicz's novel. Having tried in vain to grope my way in the darkness, I at last gave it up in despair, and, like a child that cannot read, amused myself by looking at the pictures, i.e., at the tableaux, which are certainly very fine, and worth a visit to the Sarah-Bernhardt Theatre. Fortunately, an obliging colleague, who knows one of the artists engaged in the piece, was able to tell me the plot. And from him I learned that Jean Krétuski, a young Polish officer, has met the Princess Hélène, and has fallen violently in love with her. Hélène, fascinated by the handsome youth, is anxious to rid herself of the fierce Bohun to whom she is engaged. This is no easy matter, for Bohun, a mighty warrior, is not a man to be trifled with. Jean, having started on an expedition to fight the Tartars, sends a letter to Hélène, which falls into the hands of Bohun, who, having strangled the unfortunate page, the bearer of the message, rushes with his followers to Hélène's castle, where he massacres everybody he comes across. Hélène escapes, guided by Zagloba, and Bohun follows them to their retreat, where he is killed in a duel by one of Jean's friends. The amount of firing, fighting, and shouting that goes on during these eleven tableaux would supply enough material for at least half-a-dozen melodramas; but in this condensed form the din is rather deafening. The interpretation was very good, but I could not help feeling very sorry to see that splendid artist M. Huguenet impersonate Zagloba, the "funny man" in the piece, a fat poltroon, whose sole functions consist in being always hungry and thirsty — a milk-and-water Falstaff without the humour. M. Desjardins was an excellent Bohun, and thrilled the house in the scene wherein he strangles the page. Mdlle. Gabrielle Robinne incarnated the unfortunate Hélène, and looked very pretty, which was all the rôle required from her. MM. Laroche and Decoeur were likewise satisfactory.

"A COUNTRY GIRL," transferred to French soil, appears to have lost nothing of its charm. It was received with marked favour, and bids fair to run many nights at the Olympia. MM. Isola have mounted the work with exquisite taste, and secured an excellent company, foremost among whom are that unrivalled artist, Max Dearly, who impersonated Barry, and Mdlle. Mariette Sully, who, it will be remembered, created La Poupée. With Mdlle. Bonheur, Mmes. Gabriani, Winchester, Edith Withney, Madeleine Rohan, and a number of pretty girls, MM. Tanner and Monckton's delightful work is sure to prove a big draw.

M. HENRY BERENSTEIN'S comedy Le Bercail is not likely to be brought out at the Gymnase before the end of next month.

MM. BERNÈDE AND J. GOUJON'S opera Suzel, for which M. André Polonnais wrote the music, will not be produced in in Paris, but in Rouen, at the Théâtre des Arts.

M. LUCIEN GUITOY has fixed the night of Nov. 5 for the première of M. Maurice Donnay's L'Escalade.

MISS LILIAS WALDEGRAVE sails for New York with Sir Charles Wyndham's company on Nov. 2 on the Oceanic.—Mr Percy H. Vernon, who has concluded his third South African tour with Mr Leonard Rayne, hopes to arrive in England about the end of November. During this engagement Mr Vernon has played in over twenty-four plays, sustaining such characters as Tom Oxley, in Sunday; Chigi, in The Cardinal; Scarsi, in A Life of Pleasure; Talleyrand, in A Royal Divorce; the Tramp, in A Message from Mars; Capulet, in Romeo and Juliet; Antonio, in The Merchant of Venice; and Father Lamplugh, in The Christian

COUNTY COUNCIL AND AMUSEMENTS.

(SPECIALLY REPORTED FOR THE ERA.)

On Tuesday, the usual weekly meeting of the London County Council was held at the County Hall, Spring-gardens.

ALTERATIONS IN RULES.

The Theatres and Music Halls Committee reported:—"The Council on March 1, 1904, made certain alterations in, and additions to, the rules to be observed by the licensees of premises licensed by the Council. We have since had considerable correspondence with, and have received a deputation from, the London Entertainments Protection Association on the subject of the rules in question Moreover, the Lord Chamberlain has recently revised the regulations attached to the licences for stage-plays granted by his lordship, and has made them substantially identical with the Council's rules. In so doing, however, his lordship has suggested some modifications in the rules, and to give effect to these suggestions, with which we concur, and also to meet as far as possible the views put forward by the London Entertainments Protection Association, it is necessary to make several amendments in the rules adopted on March 1, 1904."

The committee submitted in parallel columns the rules which it was proposed to alter, and the alterations which it was proposed to make in them. In Rule 8—Each exit door from the auditorium and stage must have a distinctive light fitted over it, &c.—the word "distinct" to be substituted for the word "distinctive." Rule 11—Where practicable, broad conspicuous lines at shoulder level, with frequent arrows indicating the way out, must be painted on the walls in all the corridors and exits leading to the street—to be omitted. To Rule 13, which gives the seating area to be assigned to each person, which must not be less than 2ft. deep and 1ft. 6in. wide in all parts of the house where no backs or arms are provided to the seats, and not less than 2ft. 4in deep by 1ft. 8in. wide where backs or arms are provided, and a space of at least 1ft. in depth between the front of one seat and the back of the next, the following addition is to be made:—"The above regulation shall not apply to the seating now in existence except in cases where it is proposed to rearrange the seating or to alter the premises." In Rule 16—All check boxes must be recessed or removed—the words "fixed and placed in such positions that they will not obstruct exit" to be substituted for the words "recessed or removed." In Rules 23 and 27 the words "safety curtain" to be substituted for the words "fire-resisting screen" and "fire curtain." In Rule 34—Smoking must not be permitted in the auditorium if the premises are used for dramatic entertainments—the words "solely licensed for stage plays" to be substituted for the words "used for dramatic entertainments." In Rule 35 — Smoking by members of the orchestra or others must be strictly prohibited within the stage risk—the words "except so far as may be necessary on the stage in connection with the performance" to be added. The word "Dry" to be inserted before the word "fire" in Rule 41—Fire drills must be held at least once a week in all theatres, music halls, and large concert halls.

The committee also thought it necessary to add the following rule, "which does not seek to introduce any new practice, but only to acquaint the proprietors of places of public entertainment what the practice of the Council is":—Whenever it is desired to make use of any portable or temporary steam boiler on or about the stage, for scenic effects or otherwise, not less than twenty-one days' notice must be given to the Clerk of the Council, and the fittings and arrangements in connection with the boiler must be inspected and passed by the Council's officers before the boiler is used. All boilers, pipes, radiators, &c., used for heating purposes must be equipped and maintained in accordance with the Council's detail regulations, copies of which may be obtained on application to the Clerk of the Council. Supply tanks must be covered and protected from frost, and the pipes and radiators must be protected where necessary by properly secured guards. The owner of each boiler, whether for hot water or steam, must always be prepared to exhibit to the Council's officers a certificate, dated within the previous twelve months, from some recognised insurance company, or qualified firm of engineers, showing that the boiler is in condition to safely carry the pressure to which the safety valve is loaded

The committee thought it most desirable that the regulations for theatres licensed by the Lord Chamberlain and those for premises licensed by the Council should as far as possible be identical, and recommended "That the amendments in, and additions to, the rules to be observed by licensees of premises licensed by the Council indicated in the foregoing report, be approved."

Mr CORNWALL asked whether any report had been presented notifying that there was only one exit to the street from the Empire stage, and whether the matter had received the attention of the committee.

Mr YATES said that an exhaustive report with regard to the Empire was being prepared.

Mr IDRIS suggested that the following should be added to rule 48:—All exit doors must be thrown open for the use of the audience at the end of the performance.

Mr YATES said he should be glad to accept the suggestion.

The report was then adopted.

SHELTERS.

The Building Act committee reported that they had before them at the present time several applications for permission to erect glass and iron shelters over public ways. The number of such applications received during the year was considerable, and it would be much to the public advantage if the Council would indicate the line of policy which it desired to follow with regard to them, so as to save applicants the trouble and expense of making applications which the Council might feel bound to refuse. The applications for shelters at places of public resort which had been dealt with by the Council between Jan. 1, 1904, and July, 1904, included theatres and music halls, thirty-eight consents and three refusals. The committee considered it "an absolute necessity to afford some protection from inclement weather to the persons frequenting places of public resort, and in the large number of cases where the Council has refused permission for a shelter to be erected, some special reason has existed for its action. For example, the position proposed was unsuitable, the design or mode of construction was unsatisfactory, or the amount of projection over the footway was too great.

The committee recommended that the following, amongst other conditions, should be complied with before sanction was given for the erection of a shelter over a public way:—"That the building to which the shelter is to be attached be either a theatre, music hall, or public hall, with seating accommodation for at least 500 persons, or a restaurant or hotel, with seating or sleeping accommodation for at least 200 persons. That the street in which the shelter is proposed to be erected be at least 40ft in width if used for vehicular traffic, and at least 20ft. in width if used for foot traffic only." Agreed to.

GRAND THEATRE, EDINBURGH.

This very spacious and elaborate theatre, originally known as the Tivoli, was built by a well-known merchant of Edinburgh, with a penchant for things theatric, at a cost of over £20,000, and occupying more space than any other theatre in the city. The first lessee was the late Mr Weldon Watts, who opened it on Monday, Nov. 11, 1901, at popular prices, with the Renads in The Swiss Express. The success was most pronounced, and Mr John Tiller's pantomime, A Trip to Paris, ran for four weeks, followed, also, by Mr John Tiller's Red Riding Hood pantomime for another four weeks. Mr Watts ran the theatre till the end of the spring season, and then, on the top of the music hall boom, entered into an arrangement with Mr Thomas Barrasford, who conducted the Tivoli as a music hall on the two-houses-a-night principle during 1902 and 1903 with complete success. On the death of Mr Weldon Watts, however, the lease reverted to the proprietor, who then determined to manage it himself. He further beautified and improved the theatre, and there are few theatres in the country so perfect in every way. His death a little later terminated his season, and the trustees endeavoured, unsuccessfully, to sell the property, the upset price being £15,000. Averse for some time to leasing the property, they have now entered into arrangements with a Dundee company of commercial gentlemen to take it over with purchase options. Renamed, the Grand Theatre will be opened in December next with a pantomime—Cinderella—under the entire management of Mr Eade Montefiore, who for this purpose vacates the general management of Her Majesty's Theatres, Dundee and Aberdeen.

AMERICAN AMUSEMENTS.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

NEW YORK, OCT. 19.—Mr E. H. Sothern and Miss Julia Marlowe began one of the most important engagements of the present theatrical season at the Knickerbocker Theatre last Monday, appearing together for the first time in Shakespeare's tragedy of Romeo and Juliet. Miss Marlowe had been seen here previously—about ten years ago at Wallack's Theatre—as Juliet, with the late Robert Taber as Romeo. Mr Sothern had traversed the entire field of character portrayal from Lord Chumley to Hamlet, but this was his first appearance as Romeo, and his new venture naturally aroused interest. A large and critical audience watched the performance with eager attention and applauded the principals most heartily at the close of every one of the eighteen scenes into which the play was divided. Miss Marlowe's Juliet has received far more praise from the critics than Mr Sothern's Romeo. They give Mr Sothern credit for a scholarly and graceful embodiment, but find fault with him for being too subdued and sombre, especially in his love-making. Mr Sothern was at his best in the Duel scene and that of the murder of Paris. The fight with Tybalt was very effectively enacted and evoked enthusiastic applause. Mrs Sol Smith was delightful as the Nurse. Mr W. H. Crompton did well both as Chorus and Friar Laurence. Mr G. Harrison Hunter was a good Mercutio. Mr T. L. Coleman gave an intelligent rendering of Tybalt, and Mr Rowland Buckstone was an excellent Peter. The mise-en-scène was a feast for the eye. The appearance of Miss Marlowe and Mr Sothern in this play marks the beginning of a partnership which is to continue for three years, and is to be devoted chiefly to the acting of Shakespeare.

MR CHARLES HAWTREY, having terminated his successful engagements at the leading vaudeville houses, revived A Message from Mars last night at the Princess Theatre. Mr Hawtrey's embodiment of the selfish individual who was so greatly benefited by the message took a strong hold on popular favour when he first introduced it to New York playgoers, and the revival will afford them a welcome opportunity of seeing him once more in this character before he leaves America.

"JOSEPH ENTANGLED," by Henry Arthur Jones, has scored an undeniable success at the Garrick Theatre. This diverting comedy is cleverly acted, and there is no doubt that it will be classed as one of the most enjoyable plays of the season. Mr Henry Miller as Sir Joseph Lacy has a thoroughly congenial rôle and gives a capital representation of the hapless bachelor whose predicament forms the motive of the play. Miss Hilda Spong as Lady Verona Mayne is happily cast, and her cleverness in this rôle is an important factor in the success of the piece. Others members of the company who give capable impersonations are Messrs John Glendinning, Frederick Tilden, J. Hartley Manners, Stanley Dark, Walter Allen, Miss Laura Hope-Crews, and Mrs Maggie Holloway Fisher.

THE new Liberty Theatre, owned by Messrs Klaw and Erlanger, and situated in West Forty-second-street, was opened on the 10th inst. The initial attraction was The Rogers Brothers in Paris.

"PARSIFAL," Wagner's sacred festival play, was performed for the first time on any stage in English by Mr Henry W. Savage's company, at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, on the 17th inst. A brilliant and representative audience of great size was in attendance, and the occasion was a memorable one in the stage annals of Boston. The performance began at five o'clock, and after the first act there was an intermission of one hour and a-quarter for dinner. Madame Kirkby Lunn appeared as Kundry, Alois Pennarini as Parsifal, Johannes Bischoff as Amfortas, Putnam Griswold as Gurnemanz, and Homer Lind as Klingsor. The orchestra was under the leadership of Walter H. Bothwell. The local papers speak very highly of the production. After a fortnight in Boston it will be transferred to the New York Theatre.

MRS PATRICK CAMPBELL has encountered the great American interviewer, of course, since making her great success in New York in The Sorceress. In the report of what took place Mrs Campbell is credited with not being "one of the numerous theatrical stars who at the first opportunity and on every conceivable occasion rush forth with an open and noisy avowal of their great admiration for and undying love of America." No, Mrs Campbell is not pleased with some things in Uncle Sam's country, and she did not hesitate to say so. Some of the playhouses, with their over-ornate decorations, reminded her of a dish of salad. They did not suggest art. The servants in New York were too independent, and the dressmakers outrageously expensive. But Mrs Campbell reserved her severest strictures for the American "press agent." She could not see what advantage there was to the people of the stage from his imaginary and trashy effusions. That story about her being the original of Burne Jones's painting of "The Vampire" had made her wild—there was absolutely not one word of truth in it.

A PRETTY compliment was paid to Mr Robert Evett and Mr H. A. Lytton on the 21st inst., when Mr Ivan Caryll gave the popular actors two handsome gold-mounted sticks.

MR C. SOUNES made large purchases of theatrical costumes and stage jewellery at the Marquis of Anglesey's sale last week, but he did not buy any "scenery." His forthcoming pantomime at the Grand, Woolwich, is Beauty and the Beast.

MR. RICHARD TEMPLE'S RECITAL.

Mr Richard Temple for many years delighted us as a Savoyard, and though he was restricted in that delightful form of lyrical work to very few characters—Dick Deadeye in H.M.S. Pinafore, and the pirate King in The Pirates of Penzance being the principal, he has always proved himself a cultured elocutionist, as well as a capable character actor. He gave us an opportunity, on Saturday afternoon at the Steinway Hall, of judging his powers by reciting a number of serious and humorous pieces, and it was a delight to Mr Temple's admirers to discover that he retains to the full his gifts of humour and pathos. There was considerable spirit and entrain in his delivery of Browning's fine verses "How they brought the good news from Ghent to Aix;" and the reciter brought out very effectively the music of Kipling's lines in "The Song of the Banjo." A very remarkable effort, too, was the recitation of Dante Gabriel Rosetti's piece "The Last Confession." Herein Mr Temple sat in an arm-chair, and with half-closed eyes told the pathetic story of a murder most unaccountable. No gesture was possible, but the deep remorse of the sinner was made most impressive by the varying tones of the voice, and through what must have been a most exhausting effort, he never failed to be deeply moving. "The Portrait" is somewhat of a stock recitation, and had scarcely the interest that was derived from "At the Telephone," adapted from the play Au Téléphone by Foley and De Lorde. It will be remembered that Mr Charles Warner appeared in a theatrical adaptation of the same piece a few years since. The little tragedy runs through the gamut of the emotions. The opening passages are touched in lightly and delicately, and possess a certain gaiety; but the crescendo of emotion soon commences. The badinage of the father and husband, by which he endeavours to reassure his brave and devoted wife, changes to sentences of torturing anxiety, and then deepens into the diapason of despair as the cries of "Help! Murder!" are heard through the resounding instrument. A situation of such tragic intensity is, it must be admitted, difficult to treat on an ordinary platform; yet Mr Temple quite held his audience by the genuine power he evinced, and though he had to do without the help of a telephone, he realised with genuine force and pathetic intensity the poignancy of a most harrowing situation. The second part commenced with "The Rationalistic Chicken," a piece by the Rev. J. Stone, which the reciter claimed to be quite up to date, as some of its arguments bore on a controversy now filling the columns of a popular daily. "The Courtin'," by Lowell, was instinct with the humour of a simple-minded lover of the backwoods; and there was a touch of genuine Irish drollery in Mr Temple's delivery of Milliken's "Fair Maid of Passage." Other pieces given were "Rory O'More," by Eliza Cook, with music specially composed by Arthur M. Friedländer; "One of us Two," with an appropriate accompaniment by Stanley Hawley; "Second-hand Philosophy," by E. V. C.; and "The Contrary Breeze," by W. Sapte. Miss Grace Philippa varied the recital by some pianoforte pieces by Grieg, Barnett, and Stojowski.

THE LATE WALTER SEALBY.

At the Lambeth Coroner's Court, on Monday, Mr Troutbeck held an inquest on Walter Sealby, theatrical manager, aged forty-two years, who had occupied apartments with his wife at 70, Doddington-grove, Kennington.

It appeared that for some months the deceased gentleman had been ill, and during the summer was medically treated at Douglas, Isle of Man. On his return to London he placed himself under Dr. Harrington, but after the latter had had the case in hand for thirty-five days it was decided that he should become an inpatient of St. Thomas's Home, Westminster. There he was treated for "pernicious anæmia," or progressive bloodlessness, and he died on Monday last. On the following day, according to Herbert Sealby, a brother, there was a meeting of the family, and the result was the drafting of a letter, which was duly signed by the witness and forwarded to the coroner.

Dr. Troutbeck now read the communication, which he described as a very remarkable one, and in which a demand was preferred for a post-mortem examination owing to what were considered peculiar circumstances in connection with the administration of arsenic to the deceased gentleman.

The evidence of the doctors and other witnesses, including Mr Sealby's father, went to show that Mrs Sealby, although only twenty-five years of age, was a most devoted nurse, and carried out her instructions to the letter.

Dr. Harrington, Dr. Childs, resident medical officer at St. Thomas's Home, and Dr. Freyberger gave their professional view of the treatment of the complaint from which Mr Sealby was suffering, and stated that the administration of arsenic was the only hope of saving life. Dr. Harrington explained in detail that during the thirty-five days that the deceased gentleman was under his care he gave him in all thirteen bottles of mixture, each containing six doses. The use of the term "arsenic" should not be confounded with its popular application, as the drug was in liquid form, and, as a matter of fact, the whole thirteen bottles only contained six grains. Even if Mrs Sealby had been careless in the use of the medicine, and had given the whole of it in one dose, there was not sufficient arsenic to have caused death. Dr. Freyberger described the case as one presenting the most pronounced symptoms of pernicious anæmia, and his death was due to that cause solely.

The coroner remarked that while anybody was entitled to have an inquiry held into the cause of a person's death, in the present case the extraordinary letter which he had received from Mr Sealby's brother clearly showed that it was the outcome of one foolish man exciting and playing upon the minds of other foolish people. But apart from the ignorance which was displayed as to the use and necessity of arsenic in the treatment of certain complaints, it was clear that by writing that letter to him the intention was to cast a grave imputation on the young wife of the deceased gentleman, either as to carelessness or design. The only purpose that had been served by the inquiry, which, of course, he was bound to hold in view of such a communication, was that the county had been put to very considerable expense, and the expert medical evidence showed that the original statements as to the cause of death were in every respect accurate.

The jury returned a verdict of "Death from natural causes."

MR LEONARD RAYNE has secured the South African rights of The Chevaleer from Mr Henry Arthur Jones and those of Miss Elizabeth's Prisoner from Mr Lewis Waller.

THE pictorial post-cards, published by C. W. Faulkner and Co., of 79, Golden-lane, E.C., afford the purchaser a really remarkable scope in the matter of selection, for the series numbers over 350. They represent a vast variety of subjects, and are both coloured and plain. There are Shakespearian post-cards after originals by John H. Bacon, A.R.A., portraits of actors, actresses, and singers, serious pictures, and comic pictures. Indeed, the choice is absolutely bewildering, and there are "other series in preparation." All the cards show artistic excellence, and would grace an album or a stand. From the same firm comes the "C. W. F." games. A selection of these may be recommended as most acceptable Christmas presents for youngsters home for the holidays, while children of a larger growth will derive considerable pleasure from joining in some of the games, which require the exercise of no little skill. The ingenuity displayed in the invention of these pastimes for the long winter evenings is remarkable.

LONDON & SUBURBAN THEATRES.

THE GRAND.

On Monday, Oct. 24, the Drama, in Five Acts, by Sydney Grundy and Henry Pettitt, entitled "THE UNION JACK."

A title to conjure with indeed is The Union Jack, which was written for the Adelphi in 1888 by Sydney Grundy and the late Henry Pettitt in order that breezy William Terriss, who had made The Harbour Lights at the same theatre so immensely popular, might again be seen as a happy, light-hearted sailor. How well we remember the production at the home of melodrama in the Strand. The cheers loud and long that greeted "handsome Bill" on the night of the production are a far-away echo of a popularity as great as it was deserved. Alas! no one has since played the British tar like poor Terriss. It was exactly suited to his temperament—impulsive, earnest, downright, and with the heart of a lion. The revival of the piece by Mr Davey and Mr Oswald Brand at the Islington house is well timed, and during the week the enthusiasm that has been evoked by certain lines has been eloquent of the undercurrent of feeling aroused in minds of the million by the outrageous blunder of the Russian fleet. In the original cast of The Union Jack we may note the name of Miss Olga Nethersole, who played the part of Ruth Medway, and the late Miss Eleanor Bufton made one of her last appearances on the stage as Mrs Stone. The stock company at the Grand is headed by Mr Ernest Leicester, who plays Jack Medway. In such a wholly grateful part it need hardly be said that he is seen to immense advantage. As a gentleman in our immediate neighbourhood observed on the night of our visit, "Jack is a good plucked 'un!" and this is exactly the note that dominates Mr Leicester's acting; but there is no lack of delicacy either in his treatment of the love scenes with Ethel Arden. In the interview with his erring sister Ruth this Jack evokes spontaneous sympathy by his manly sincerity and his outburst of indignation at the wrong done to the little girl he had promised to shield from harm. Mr Leicester has a boldness and freedom of bearing which are of immense value in such a part, and he scores a decided triumph. Miss Helen Bancroft as the heroine in the earlier acts evinces a cheeriness that is quite in consonance with the happiness that has come into Ethel Arden's life. Later in the piece she develops the pathos and terror of her share in the second and third acts with intensity and truth, and her depiction of anguish in the last act is certainly convincing. In the part of Ruth Medway Miss Kathleen Kelly's simplicity of expression enables her to impart sincerity to the confession of the broken-hearted girl in the second scene. Mr Joynson Powell as Captain Morton does not over-accentuate the villainy of that currish specimen of an English army officer. He might easily, to please the groundlings and the gods, make of him a scowling scoundrel; but instead he veneers the part with the necessary polish, and scores thereby. That experienced favourite of the foot-lights, Mrs Stanislaus Calhaem, is just exactly as hearty and as merry and as good-natured a Mrs Pippin as one would expect her to be. She makes every line in her part tell, and gives admirable emphasis to every comic incident with which her part is embellished. Mr Arthur Estcourt gives quiet but none the less forcible effect to the lines of Sir Philip Yorke. Mr Frank Stone is a satisfactory Lieutenant Stanley. In Mr Hal Collier is to be found a capital Peter Fly, whose courtship of Polly Pippin, agreeably represented by Miss Winifred Leeson, causes so much jealousy in the breast of that blighted being, Tom Chuckle, a part that is capably handled by Mr George Elliston. Miss Kate Brand is a buoyant and vivacious Ivy Arden, and other parts are effectively treated by Messrs H. Baines, F. Jelly, C. Fenton, Frank Dudley, R. Trevor, George Leigh, and Bert Havill. The scenery and accessories are on the liberal scale that is always to be found at this theatre.

THE WEST LONDON.

On Monday, Oct. 24, the Drama, in Four Acts, by William Bailey, jun., and Charles Berte, entitled "THE CITY OF MILLIONS."

This modern spectacular drama, by reason of its local associations, always arouses much interest in the Marylebone district, and a well-filled house assembled this week to welcome once again Messrs Bailey and Berte's successful play to the home of its birth. The chief interest of the drama centres round the doings of an adventuress, one Rosa De Valois, a part that fits that charming actress, Miss Madge Girdlestone, like the proverbial glove. All the varying emotions of love, hatred, and scorn are depicted by her in realistic fashion, with the result that she never looks back from the rise of the curtain to its final fall, with its promise of her bright and happy future. The wicked machinations of Capt. Wilfred Dread are portrayed by Mr Martin Sabine with that semblance of polished villainy that always stamps the genuine actor in these somewhat trying characters. Mr Sabine had sound reasons to shake hands with himself on the pronounced measure of success that he attained. Mr Vernon Sansbury as the young mining engineer Jack Stacey gave a sound reading of the part, his effort in the third act being an especially fine one; and Mr Grahame Herington in the George Grossmith, jun., style of character, viz., the Hon. Benjamin Boodle, evoked much hearty laughter with his varied eccentricities. Mr Sam Wilkinson as the dustman Bob Westwood acted in capital style, his fooling being of that rough and ready sort that always hits the mark. Mr Claremont Gaskell as the genial policeman, Joseph Smudgley, deserves every credit for his handling of a part that is so easy to overdo, but not so Mr Gaskell, who treated it with much effective skill. Miss Agnes Verity sustained the rôle of Jessie Townshend with a grace and charm that were most noticeable, and her winsome appearance further enlisted the sympathies of the susceptible West Londoners on her behalf. Miss Gladys Vernon was full of life and go as the tantalising housemaid, Kitty Taylor, her scenes with Joseph Smudgley and Bob Westwood being full of genuine fun; Miss Audrey Canning was a motherly Mrs Chesney; Miss Elaine Wilson calls for mention as the French maid, Juliet; and Miss Maud Steward proved to have made a capital study of the forlorn, but sagacious, waif, Timothy Tippitt. All the minor parts were in capable hands, and the dressing and mounting beyond reproach.

THE CORONET.

On Monday, Oct. 24, the Comedy, by Hubert Henry Davies, entitled "COUSIN KATE."

From its very rarity nowadays domestic comedy is acceptable, and when its quality is as excellent as is that of Mr Hubert Henry Davies's piece, Cousin Kate, which was produced at the Haymarket Theatre in the June of 1903, and has since survived by reason of its fitness, the treat is doubly delightful. Possibly the audiences at Notting-hill-gate are peculiarly well able to appreciate the social satire in the play. At any rate, they took all the points with alacrity, and laughed at and applauded the comedy dialogue most readily. Dramatists do not always realise how much brightness, optimism, and simplicity have to do with the success of a piece with the public. "Impossibilists" will, no doubt, sneer at the very commonplace material from which Mr Davies has evolved such prosperous results; but as long as those results are received—as they have been for a year or more—with satisfaction and delight by thousands, the clever author can afford to be amused by such cheap cynicism. Cousin Kate has nothing morbid about it. It is only a "slice" of middle-class country life, depicted with remarkable restraint and repose; qualities which are even rarer and more estimable than the gay humour and good spirits which are Mr Davies's chief recommendations to his public. The entire success of the comedy at the Coronet this week is greatly owing to the smooth, artistic way in which the piece is acted by Miss Emma Hutchison and Mr Percy Hutchison's well-selected company. That enterprising "firm" has been fortunate in securing an actor of the ability, experience, and reputation of Mr Yorke Stephens to impersonate the plausible Irishman, Heath Desmond. Mr Stephens sustains the character with the crisp firmness and quiet polish which have distinguished his career on the London stage; and he makes every line of the dialogue between Heath and Kate Curtis in the second act tell with artistic lightness of touch and an airy ease which are combined with great finish and admirable acuteness and tact. His performance is a tower of strength to the cast, and its general tone is as fine and its style as good as they have been in all Mr Yorke Stephens's previous impersonations. Miss Lilias Earle, who plays Kate Curtis, is fortunate in having so expert and accomplished a jeune premier to act with. Miss Earle is the essence of cheery amiability. Her merry smile inspires the audience with sympathetic hilarity, and her performance is replete with the spirit of mirth and jollity. Her distinct enunciation and judicious emphasis give full effect to every line of her part, and her agreeable and attractive appearance in some becoming costumes completes her conquest over her hearers and beholders. Miss Earle may certainly be congratulated on the success of her performance as Kate Curtis. Mr Walter Ringham was most fortunately selected to embody the Rev. James Bartlett. He does not overdo the clerical affectations of the locum tenens; and his appearance is exactly suited to the rôle. A nice discrimination prevents him from an exaggeration which would be fatal to the fidelity of Mr Davies's character-sketch; and the author must be well satisfied with such a reading of his work. Master Vyvian Thomas as Bobby Spencer is at present a little too distinct and precise; he might "let himself go" more—maintaining, of course, his commendable accuracy of pronunciation. He looks very nice, however, and is quite well-bred, only he might be a little more boyish. Miss Helen Leyton as Mrs Spencer shows what valuable assets of an actress are ripe experience and thorough training in a good school. Her performance is ladylike, simple, and natural; and she looks the personage exactly. Miss Hilda Honiss does just what is required in the rôle of Amy Spencer, and is personally extremely well adapted for its presentation. She acts with a keen appreciation of its possibilities and a commendable amount or repose and firmness. Miss Betty Castly is broadly funny as the exuberant servant; and her bursts of joyous familiarity evoke hearty laughter. The piece is nicely mounted and dressed; and Cousin Kate has been received at the Coronet with the heartiest laughter and the most encouraging applause.

THE CAMDEN.

On Monday, Oct. 24, the Comedy, by J. M. Barrie, entitled "LITTLE MARY."

Mr John Hare and company are here this week in Mr J. M. Barrie's amusing play Little Mary. Of course by this time everyone knows who "little Mary" is, but although there is no longer a mystery about her, it remains a very amusing comedy, and the audience on Monday were in a continual state of laughter throughout. Mr John Hare appears as the Earl of Carlton, and gives one of those finished pieces of acting for which he has made himself famous. It is a delightful performance, so natural and refined. Miss Hilda Trevelyan undertakes the part of Moira, which she plays winsomely and fully realises the idea of the character. Lord Rolfe finds a capital exponent in Mr Carter Pickford; Mr Eric Maturin in the part of the Earl of Plumbleigh, a schoolboy, is most natural; Mr Rudge Harding as Sir Jennings Pyke gives a neat sketch of a West-end specialist; and Mr Clifford Brooke makes a good Dr. Topping. Miss Helen Rous represents the Countess of Plumbleigh with distinction, and Miss Kathleen Gordon Lee as Milly and Miss Beatrice Kelston as Eleanor both distinguish themselves. Mr Fred Grove is excellent as the old chemist, Terence Reilly. The play is preceded by Frederick Fenn and Richard Pryce's clever little piece 'Op o' me Thumb, in which Miss Hilda Trevelyan plays her original part of Amanda, a wonderful piece of character acting. The Horace Greensmith of Mr Rudge Harding is also a clever bit of work. The principal play is finely mounted, the scene representing the Courtyard of the House being one of the most artistic sets we have seen for a long time.

THE KING'S, HAMMERSMITH.

On Monday, Oct. 24, the Musical Comedy, by Paul Rubens, entitled "THREE LITTLE MAIDS."

To judge by its reception on Monday evening at the hands of a crowded house the Three Little Maids have lost none of their charms for the patrons of the King's. Mr Paul Rubens's comedy went with all the dash which characterised its first visit to Hammersmith last year, when Miss Edna May was in the cast. Mr Charles Macdona's company will bear comparison with the previous organisation, and it gives every evidence of having been carefully selected. Ada Branscombe is animatedly played by Miss Janet Reeve, who sings with decided expression. Miss Nora Guy makes a bright and pleasing Edna, and the Hilda of Miss Gertrude Melville is a fascinating performance. Miss Kate Forster as Lady St. Mallory is quite successful, and Miss Laura Wright is an excellent Gretchen. Miss Jennie Edgar, Miss Ethel May, and Miss Ella Daincourt as Lady Rosemary, Venette Grafton, and Lady Marjory Crichton earn applause. Lord Cheyne finds an able impersonator in Mr Arthur Longley, who causes huge laughter by his amusing "Johnnie" style. Brian Molyneux is rendered in clever manner by Mr Haddon Cave, and his singing is highly commendable. The acting of Mr Alec Chentreens as M. De L'Orme (of the French Embassy) is most enjoyable, and Mr Gus Oxley is quietly humorous as Cupid, a caddie. Mr Charles Leverton is satisfactory as the Rev. Mr Branscombe. The chorus is an excellent one, the dresses are in good taste, and the scenery is very creditable.

ALEXANDRA THEATRE, N.

On Monday, Oct. 24, the Play, in Five Acts, by David Belasco and J. L. Long, entitled "THE DARLING OF THE GODS."

The thanks of Stoke Newington playgoers are due to Mr F. W. Purcell for bringing to their doors such a complete and elaborate production as is The Darling of the Gods, as presented by Mr Tree's company. The mounting and dressing of the piece are as in a West-end production, and the effects are managed in a manner seldom, if ever, met with in a travelling organisation. Great care and discrimination have evidently been exercised in the selection of the company, which is headed by that ripe and experienced actor Mr G. W. Anson, whose performance of Zakkui, the cunning and scheming Minister of State, compels interest, and holds the attention of the audience in every scene in which he is concerned. A very striking and powerful embodiment of the outlaw, Kara, comes from Mr Alexander Calvert, and he fully deserves the generous applause with which he is rewarded. A very charming exponent of Yo San, the "Darling of the Gods," is found in Miss Lilian Stafford, whose work in the fourth act reaches a very high level of excellence. A noticeable performance is that of Mr Ernest Stallard, who appears as Kato, the fisher of carp, and Miss Augusta Haviland scores heavily by the intensity of her playing as Rosy Sky. The part of Saigon is done full justice to by Mr A. P. Kaye, and Mr P. R. Goodyer is successful as Tanda Tanji. Mr Robert Gray does well as Banza. The remaining parts are all well and carefully filled. Not the least pleasing feature of the production is the admirable rendering of the special and appropriate music, which has been composed for the production by Mr William Furst, by the Alexandra orchestra, under the direction of Mr Arthur L. Spittle, Mr Tree's musical conductor.

THE MARLBOROUGH.

On Monday, Oct. 24, the Musical Play, in Three Acts, entitled "THE GIRL FROM KAY'S."

Mr George Dance's company has been appearing in Messrs Owen Hall and Ivan Caryll's piece at the Marlborough Theatre this week; and the visit has been a decided success. Several changes have been made in the cast, and the results are agreeably interesting. The musical play has been judiciously broadened with a view of suiting the tastes of suburban and provincial audiences; and justification is found for this process in the roars of laughter which are evoked by the absurd and extravagant comic business which is liberally introduced. A part which gains in importance by this cheery freedom is that of Joseph. This personage holds in the play somewhat the position which the Greek chorus held in a drama of Euripides. The character is elaborated and developed with genuine ability by Mr Fred Rolph, whose hall porter is a real comedy character. Particularly good is Mr Rolph's facial expression, which is intensely expressive, and the mixture of official dignity, sly servility, and cynical contempt in Joseph's complex nature is admirably indicated. Mr H. C. Barry's Hoggenheimer is exquisitely odd and eccentric; and the utter absurdity of the positions in which the fond financier is placed is emphasised by Mr H. C. Barry with a freedom and funniness which have their reward in the hearty laughter of the audience. Strongly farcical, too, is the Hon. Percy Fitzthistle of Mr Leslie Roy Cathie, who is personally well suited to the part, and presents a most diverting caricature of Hoggenheimer's aristocratic parasite. A pleasing performance of the rôle of Norah Chalmers is contributed by Miss Alice Russon, who has a refined and graceful style and a delicate and dainty method. Her depiction of the nervously jealous wife is neat and effective, and the rendering of the sobbing song in the second act is immensely successful. Miss Maisie North makes a very sprightly and active Eileen, and her singing and dancing are equally exhilarating, both being applauded in the most enthusiastic manner. Miss Simeta Marsden lays special stress on the haughty superiority of Winnie Harborough, whose predominance over the love-sick Hoggenheimer is made particularly evident in this case. She puts a liberal amount of energy and expression into the delivery of her songs, and her fine appearance, her quiet confidence, and her excellent voice and manner complete the success. Mr Charles Hanbury plays Harry Gordon with a valuable amount of good breeding, repose, and gentlemanly address, and Miss Ada Crossley is comely and attractive as Mrs Chalmers, and makes her points with judicious moderation and practised skill. Mr Arthur Jackson, well made-up and full of sharpness and decision, is excellent as Theodore Quench, and Mr John Wigley does all that is required as Mr Chalmers, and does it remarkably well. The minor parts are all suitably cast. As usual with Mr Dance's companies, the chorus and the costumes are thoroughly attended to. The young ladies who represent the Kay girls and the bridesmaids are completely acquainted with their duties, and perform them very ably and spiritedly. Mr Austen Hurgon, who has produced the piece for Mr Dance, deserves great credit for his able and careful arrangements, and the musical director, Mr Victor Champion, is to be complimented on the judgment with which he wields the bâton. The Girl from Kay's has been received at the Marlborough Theatre this week with hearty laughter and enthusiastic applause, and Mr George Dance has once more vindicated his reputation as an entrepreneur of travelling companies.

DALSTON THEATRE.

On Monday, Oct. 24, the Drama, by Arthur Shirley and Sutton Vane, entitled "A PATH OF THORNS."

Audiences at the Dalston Theatre this week are being treated to a decidedly interesting story and to specimens of most creditable acting in the performance of the stirring domestic drama, A Path of Thorns. One of the principal characters is the Rev. Frank Selby. Parsons, somehow or the other—even though many of them may be made subjects of mirth—are generally popular, and Mr Cyril W. Mackay adds one more interesting embodiment to the list. Mr Claude King is effective as John Edmunds, an inventor; and as Bessie Edmunds Miss Violet Luddington does well. Sam Hallett, a typical Lancashire lad, finds an able exponent in Mr Alfred Lester, and Miss Amy Rogerson becomes popular as Jane Adelaide, who is duly and very frequently announced in the course of the representation as "the future Mrs Hallett." Jonas Deane, a contractor, finds a suitably brusque representative in Mr Cecil Du Gue, and Mr G. M. Cooke is Edward Langley, his partner. Mr A. C. Clarke as Mr Pickford, a churchwarden; Mr Harry F. Wright as Dr. Gaye, Mr J. H. Booth as Jim Price, a burglar; and Mr W. L. Rignold as Ratty Gabbit, his accomplice, each add their quota of interest to the representation. Miss Mary Raby is responsible for the important rôle of Constance Howard, a more fortunate creature than her poor sister, Nellie, which part is played by Miss M. Stanley Burt. Both these characters are admirably presented, and the ladies are the recipients of hearty rounds of applause.

KENNINGTON THEATRE.

On Monday, Oct. 24, the Musical Comedy, by George Dance and Howard Talbot, entitled "A CHINESE HONEYMOON"

The tremendous success of A Chinese Honeymoon, both at the Strand Theatre and in the provinces, invites examination into the reasons of the remarkable popularity of Messrs George Dance and Howard Talbot's piece. It may be attributed to various causes. In the first place, the ideas and characters are decidedly amusing; in the second, the personages of the little drama are depicted by clever comedians and comediennes, who make the very most of their materials. Much—a great deal more than is generally imagined—is due to the subtle influence of the costumes and surroundings. China and Japan seem particularly suited to the requirements of light musical pieces; and in selecting the "Flowery Land" as the scene of the adventures of Mr and Mrs Pineapple, Mr Dance did wisely indeed. He has also acted very shrewdly in sending out his principal company, which has been appearing at Kennington this week, equipped and furnished quite in West-end style. The only way, nowadays, to make money in the country and the suburbs is to offer local patrons an entertainment of no second-rate or cheapened class; and Mr Dance has "done the thing well" in this instance as in others. Particularly striking is the chorus in this capital company. It is numerous, it is strong, vocally and personally, and it is trained to perfection. One might almost fancy oneself at the Savoy in the old Gilbert and Sullivan days, so precisely and daintily do the damsels of China move, attitudinise, and manipulate their pretty parasols. As for the musical part of their work, it is done with a power and feeling which swell out Mr Howard Talbot's choruses magnificently, and give his music its entire value. The piece is put on not only regardless of expense but in admirable taste; and each of the costumes worn by the members of the chorus is quite a little picture in itself. When the ladies are grouped on the stage they create a delightful "flower-bed" effect; and, individually, they are comely, shapely, and intensely conscientious in the matter of stage business and brisk vocal work. A chorus so handsome and so hard-working is seldom seen in any musical play. Hardwork all round is, indeed, the secret of the exhilarating tout ensemble produced by this clever combination. Miss Vera Vere, the representative of Fi-Fi, certainly does not spare herself. She gives a reading of the rôle which is decidedly her own; and her quaint personality is irresistible. The humour of her performance is undeniable; and she dances with a spontaneous gaiety which quite carries the audience away. Her singing of the "Methusalem" song, with its accompanying pas seul, brings down the house; and, altogether, Miss Vere may be congratulated on having triumphed over the very great difficulty of following an artist like Miss Louie Freear in a famous part. Another very active and vivacious performer is Miss Eva Bevington, who, as Mrs Pineapple, is ever alert, and who emphasises every line and point of the character, besides dancing and singing very vigorously. An excellent example of Miss Bevington's merits is her rendering of the ditty "The à la Girl," in which both her mimicry and the movements are very animated. Mr Philip Hayden's fine, resonant voice and massive dignity, as the Emperor of Ylang Ylang, tell immensely; and he acts with all the necessary ease and aplomb. Mr Ernest Laws is the essence of official acidity as Chipple Chop; and Mr Fred Payne, who bears the family trade mark conspicuously in face and delivery, is dryly droll as the Lord High Admiral. Mr Frank Crimp is a manly, spirited, and agreeable exponent of the rôle of Tom Atherton, which he plays with style, yet without affectation; and Mr Martin Adeson underlines with deeply-cut comicality the strenuous gallantry of Mr Pineapple, making the part stand out conspicuously by his strong and acute treatment. Miss Holford Beringer is most happily cast as Mrs Brown; and her tall figure, assisted by an excellent make-up, renders her representation of the "official mother-in-law" both striking and diverting. An entirely sweet and charming Soo-Soo is Miss Madge Temple, who sings her songs very spiritedly and gives an expressive and, at times, quite dramatic depiction of the Emperor's niece. The completeness of the production reflects very great credit upon Mr Austen Hurgon, to whose efforts much of the success achieved is undoubtedly due. Honours must be shared, however, by Mr A. Romilli's orchestra, which is a valuable factor of the general triumph. In Mr J. Alban Newton, Mr Dance has a business manager who is both alert and obliging. A Chinese Honeymoon has elicited immense enthusiasm at Kennington this week.

BRIXTON THEATRE.

On Monday, Oct. 24. "THE NEW CLOWN."

"Here we are again," cheery as ever, is the "slogan" of Mr Stanley Cooke and company, who are appearing this week in Mr H. M. Paull's clever farcical comedy The New Clown, under the personal direction of Mr Herbert Greville, at the tastefully-appointed Brixton Theatre. All London laughed when this droll whimsicality was exploited at the Comedy and Terry's Theatre, and the bright, wholesome, spontaneous humour of the piece is calculated to act as a tonic on the jaded Londoner be he resident in Park-lane or Brixton, or, for that matter, in distant Johannesburg or the Antipodes. Mr Stanley Cooke has just the quaint appearance and the languid yet bustling manner required for the embodiment of the character of the young lordling, Cyril Garston. His simulation of terror and remorse when he thinks he has committed manslaughter, and his ludicrous efforts to be funny and to rival the professional purveyor of acrobatic humour in his low comedy antics are realistic to a degree and side-splitting in their drollery. Mr Herbert Greville gives a careful and well-thought-out rendering of the part of Mr Dixon, the circus proprietor, with such a high sense of dignity and deportment, and he tempers the more truculent side of the man's character with a touch of sentiment and feeling. Miss Katie Yates makes a most charming and unaffected Rosie Platt, the ladylike little barebacked rider and circus "star." She gives a pleasant tone of refinement and genuine feeling to a part which might easily be spoiled by being coarsened or overdone. Mr Fred Paul as the hearty, well-meaning, overbearing, conceited young Hercules, Captain the Hon. Jack Trent, is well in the picture; and Miss Violet Greville as Winnie Chesterton and Miss Evelyn Maxwell as her sister Maud contribute pleasing and natural performances in the small parts allotted to them. Mr Fred Lake as the bibulous Thomas Baker gives a good low comedy sketch, and Mr David Beattie is vastly amusing as the sanctimonious Pennyquick, purveyor of pastry. Mr James Benwell carries all before him as Billy (a strong man). Master Clyde Burchett scores as the small boy with the washing, and Mr Humphrey Warden adds to the fun as the writ-serving Figgis, a lawyer's clerk. Nor must we forget the admirably trained donkey Ping Pong, in her original character, a clever and pretty creature. Mr Spencer Allen acts the small part of Lamb, landlord of the riverside inn.

The principal piece was preceded by an original comedy, in one act, by Ernest Bellamy, entitled "WOOING BY WIRE."

Mr John Vincent ..... Mr James Benwell
Mr Fred Thompson ..... Mr Humphrey Warden
Mr William Jinks ..... Master Clyde Burchett
Miss Elsie Maitland ..... Miss Katie Yates

Mr Ernest Bellamy has but a very slight foundation as regards plot for his one-act comedy, which was produced on Monday evening. Mr John Vincent is a young man in business as an auctioneer, but that somewhat prosaic occupation has not prevented him falling in love, the object of his adoration being pretty Elsie Maitland. Now, it so happens that his office boy, William Jinks, who possesses a full share of the modern youth's impudence, is also enamoured of a young lady named Elsie, and hence arise sundry misunderstandings and a good deal of fun. The telephone is made considerable use of, the scene being Vincent's office, where he is visited by his friend Fred Thompson, a young gentleman who is nearly as inquisitive as Paul Pry himself. Another visitor appears in the person of Vincent's sweetheart, Miss Elsie Maitland, who rather boldly offers the suggestion that her lover should by means of the telephone ask her father's consent to the marriage. The paternal sanction is ultimately obtained, and the cheeky office-boy bestows his blessing upon the happy pair. The little piece has the advantage of being well played. Mr James Benwell acts with spirit and ability as Mr John Vincent, the amorous young auctioneer; Master Clyde Burchett as the office-boy, William Jinks, is immensely diverting and natural; and Miss Katie Yates acts with point and precision as Miss Elsie Maitland. Mr Humphrey Warden also contributes his quota of fun as Fred Thompson, Vincent's irritating friend. Mr Fred Lake is the stage-manager, and Mr Herbert Greville looks after the front of the house.

THE CROWN, PECKHAM.

On Monday, Oct. 24, the Musical Comedy, by Malcom Watson and J. A. Robertson, entitled "WINNIE BROOKE, WIDOW."

The insidious fascinations of Winnie Brooke, Widow, as expressed by Miss Ada Reeve, delighted a charmed audience on Monday; a crowded and enthusiastic audience that re-demanded each song and dance and evinced the keenest relish for the many saucy things both said and done by this most captivating and audacious widow. Miss Reeve's song on woman, "I'm one of you, so I ought to know," was, perhaps, first favourite; while her topical song, "You'll find there's still plenty to learn," brought down the house with its suggestion that Russia's navy should be made to learn the distinguishing marks of destroyer and fishing smack. Miss Reeve also won great favour in the dainty duet of song and dance, "If you were a schoolboy," and in the semi-pathetic, "If only they knew," with organ obbligato. Miss Drusilla Wills was an ideal boyden as the rustic laundry girl, Eustasia Eglantine Honoria Brown. Mrs Charles Maltby was funnily sad as Hannah, the wife without a smile, whose matrimonial troubles of twenty years circled around a haddock. Miss Janet Hedson was sufficiently grim as Mrs Garside, and Miss Kitty Clinton a winning, though rebellious schoolgirl. Mr Henry Vibart invested the part of the woman-hater, Dudley Mayne, with impressive and distinguished grace, captivating his audience equally with the widow. Mr Edgar Stevens as Reginald Frampton rendered his song "All love is sweet" admirably, and acted throughout with spirit. Mr Leon Aston Jarry was excellent as Julian Croft; Mr Stephen Adeson as the smart solicitor, Montague Brent, was splendid in song and dance; Mr James Stevenson amusing as the Rev. Elihu Garside; while Mr F. B. Sharpe as Toby and Mr Edward Rigby as Hercules were the life and soul of the Brotherhood. The chorus singing is fresh and spirited, the scenery admirable, and the dresses emphatically "dreams."

BOROUGH THEATRE, STRATFORD.

On Monday, Oct. 24, the Comedy, in Three Acts, by J. M. Barrie, entitled "THE PROFESSOR'S LOVE STORY."

Mr E. S. Willard's visit to Stratford this week is an event gladsome to the hearts of local playgoers, who are thus enabled to see this eminent actor in two of his most popular creations, The Professor's Love Story being in the bill up till Wednesday night, and from Thursday onwards The Middleman, with Mr Willard as Cyrus Blenkarn, is the attraction. An enthusiastic audience followed with rapt attention the progress of The Professor's Love Story on Monday night, chief interest naturally centering round Mr Willard's impersonation of the amiable, absent-minded Professor Goodwille, which is a finished and artistic conception, played in true comedy vein, affording unqualified delight to those in the auditorium. Strong support is accorded Mr Willard by his excellent company. Miss Maud Hoffmann contributes a delightful portraiture of Lucy White, whose ingenuous coquetry wins the Professor to the ranks of the Benedicts. Miss Edith M. Tombes as the Professor's regardful sister Agnes plays in easy, natural, and refined style; the worldly-wise Lady Gilding is portrayed with much ability by Miss Mabel Dubois; and the match-making, amorous Dowager Lady Gilding is delineated with remarkable fidelity by Miss Eileen Warren. The idiosyncrasies of the inanilоquent Sir George Gilding are hit off exactly by Mr A. S. Homewood; the jovial, good-hearted Dr. Cousens has a capital exponent in Mr H. Crane; and the affable conceit of Dr. Yellowless is ably accentuated by Mr J. Jefferson Farjeon. The two farm labourers, Pete and Henders, whose amorous leanings towards the Professor's housekeeper, Effie Proctor, is the source of so much amusement, are in the safe hands of Mr Walter Edmunds and Mr William Sauter respectively, both of whom made the utmost of their opportunities, and score heavily in these fine character rôles. Most of their good work is in conjunction with Mrs Russ Whytal as Effie Proctor, in praise of whose performance too much cannot be said. Admirable staging marks the production.

THEATRE ROYAL, STRATFORD.

On Monday, Oct. 24, the Drama, in Four Acts, by George R. Sims, entitled "THE LIGHTS O' LONDON."

A popular attraction is provided at the Stratford Theatre Royal this week by the engagement of Mr Herbert Hollister's company in The Lights o' London, and the sentiment of the piece appeared to exactly suit Monday night's large audience. The drama is excellently staged, and the cast well balanced and capable. Mr Cecil G. Calvert is a virile exponent of Harold Armytage, and Bess is played with feeling and sympathy by Miss Jeanne Burgoyne. Mr Albert Brasque plays with marked ability as the scheming and vindictive Clifford Armytage and a graphic sketch of Seth Preene comes from Mr Herbert Hollister. Mr Percy Compton is always amusing and entertaining as Jarvis, Mrs Emilie Dawson cleverly portrays Mrs Jarvis, and Shakespeare Jarvis is spiritedly played by Miss Gladys Murray. Mr J. W. Mackay does well as Jim, Mr F. V. Lloyd plays appropriately as Squire Armytage, and Mr Harold Wallace fulfils all requirements as Marks. Mr Ernest K. Nelson is an amusing Philosopher Jack, Mr Reginald Gears scores as Percy De Vere, a police-superintendent is well played by Mr W. Wells, Little Ida Murray makes a pathetic picture of Joey, and Miss Kate Randolph is well placed as Hetty Preene. Other parts are in capable hands.

SHAKESPEARE, CLAPHAM-JUNCTION.

On Monday, Oct. 24, the Drama in Four Acts, by Justin Huntly M'Carthy, entitled "IF I WERE KING."

An excellent company is representing this romantic play to suburban audiences. Mr Frank Fenton, who himself plays the part of François Villon with conspicuous success, has chosen his company carefully, and keeps everything up to the highest pitch of efficiency. Mr Clive Curry is all that can be desired as Louis XI., and the support of Mr Fred Garrett in the character of Tristan l'Hermite, Provost of France, is invaluable. Mr Ernest Marsh is also deserving of praise for his rendering of the part of Olivier De Dain, the king's barber. Mr Leonard Maxwell as Thibaut d'Aussigny, Grand Constable of France, makes a fine manly figure, and speaks his lines with impressiveness. Mr Laurence Grove is also praiseworthy in the part of Noel Le Jolys, a Courtier, and Mr Charles Phillips does well as Rebin Turgis, the innkeeper; Miss Louise Vansitter as Huguette du Humel, known as the Abbess, plays the part with all the abandon it needs; Miss Marion Gray looks very attractive as Katherine de Vaucelles, the heroine, and succeeds in a difficult part. Misses Magda Willdenberg, Lilian Reynolds, Noney Seabrooke, and Mary Marshall as the friends of the Abbess, contribute excellent studies. Miss Una Gilbert as Mother Villon and Miss Violet Monkton as the Queen of France are good in minor parts. Messrs Francis J. Bithell, Herbert Brownlow, William Frazer, L. M. Moorfield, John Franklin, Richard Jackson, Will Barrett, Max Gordon, and W. Littlejohn all deserve to be singled out for commendation. The scenery and mounting are remarkably good.

GREENWICH THEATRE, S.E.

On Monday, Oct. 24, the Drama entitled "THE KING OF COINERS."

This drama met with the hearty approval of a crowded house on Monday. The piece was well acted, particularly by Mr J. Frederick Kent, who gave a very powerful impersonation of the title-rôle. Mr Harry M'Farland was an effective Wrenbow; Mr Henry M. Galvin presented an excellent character sketch of the miser, Nero Morath; Mr H. Naylor Grimson was good as Philip; Mr Harry Delman was a competent Jerry; and Mr M. Madden an amusing Michael. Miss Ethel M. Grey was a bright and pleasing Katie; Miss Muriel Deane an attractive Hilda; little Miss Reana Robertson was a charming Rosalie, and sang very prettily; and finally Miss Lillie Monckton must be congratulated on an admirable rendering of the part of Nellie Vernon, the coiner's wife.

OPERA HOUSE, CROUCH-END.

On Monday, Oct. 24, the Musical Comedy, entitled "THE GIRL FROM JAPAN."

Mr Fredk. E. Philpott's company presented on Monday for the first time at this house the musical comedy, in two acts, entitled The Girl from Japan. The composer of the music, Mr Colet Dare, conducted the orchestra. The merriment occasioned by the piece was sustained to the fall of the curtain, for it is brimful of comicalities, and may justly be termed one of the funniest musical comedies on the road. The music is bright and effective; the dresses are very attractive; and the staging calls for high praise. Mr S. Lockridge impersonates Lord Allenbury with success, and this gentleman's well-trained voice is exactly suited to the numbers allotted to him. Mr Alfred Wood makes a good study of Sir Mulberry Flippington; Mr Percy Baverstock scores in the rôle of the General Baugh;

Mr Ernest Spalding is responsible for some side-splitting humour in his portraiture of the Rev. John Smith, and Mr Tom E. Sinclair well fulfils the responsibilities of the rôle of Horatio Blinks. The interpretation of Bingle in versatile Mr Chas. L. Ludlow's hands makes it one of excellent merit. Miss Essie Deane is a piquant Countess De La Rue; Miss Nellie Jackson is quaintly picturesque as Polly Perkins; and Miss Nellie Parker Dent lacks neither spirit nor energy in her conception of Lady Flippington. Honours are also earned by Miss Maidie Scott, a bright and charming performer, whose sand dance calls for special congratulation. She is agile to a degree. Miss Nellie Valentine is a graceful and pleasing Violet Meadows, and the pas de deux of the Sisters Violet and Lillie English is well received. The production redounds to the credit of Mr F. E. Philpott, who superintended it.

NEW EALING THEATRE.

On Monday, Oct. 24, the Musical Comedy, in Two Acts, entitled "THE BELLE OF NEW YORK."

The energetic manager of this theatre Mr Fred S. Jennings is to be congratulated on engaging Mr Ben Greet's No, 1 company in this popular musical play. Mr Arthur Ricketts is a comical figure as Ichabod Bronson, and gives a quietly humorous performance that is quite to the taste of the audience. The profligate Harry Bronson is ably undertaken by Mr Harold Wardroper. Mr Walter Emro keeps the house in roars of laughter by his eccentricities as Karl Von Pumpernick. Mr Mac Olixe as Blinkey Bill is good, his singing being much applauded. Mr Walter Midge as Kenneth Mugg is all that can be desired. Messrs Lionel Yeoman and R. L. Cody as Counts Patsi Rattate increase the fun considerably by their decidedly droll impersonations. Miss Mora Hersee as Violet Gray is exceedingly attractive, and fills the part with dignity and grace. Miss Helen Rose is pretty as Fifi Fricot, and has a sweet voice. Miss Ida Grandison as Cora Angelique deserves credit for a good reading of the rôle. An excellent dance is contributed by Miss Florence Hersee as Mamie Claney, who is decidedly fascinating, her easy manner and light-heartedness being charming. Miss Hilda Corelli is also much admired as premiere danseuse. The minor parts are in the capable hands of Mr Guy Ford as Doc Snifkins and Mr C. O. James as Mr Twiddle. The chorus consists of a number of pretty young ladies, who have excellent voices, which they use with effect; and the performance is under the able direction of Mr Joseph Lainton.

TERRISS THEATRE.

On Monday, Oct. 24, the Drama in Four Acts, by G. Larder and Walter Melville, entitled "THE GREAT WORLD OF LONDON."

The drama is preceded each evening by the laughable farce, entitled Tables Turned, in which prominent parts are filled by Mr Fred De Vere, Mr Campion Abbott, and Miss Hulo Hodgson. A pair of clever duettists and dancers, the Sisters Belrose, then occupy the stage, and are well received. Next follows the well-known "skatorial" comedian, Mr H. E. High, whose turn is much appreciated. Having disposed of the variety part of the programme, the attention of the audience is turned to the more serious contemplation of the drama, which, in the hands of the very competent stock company, receives an extremely meritorious presentation Mr Lionel D'Aragon once again assumes the responsibilities of the hero, Jack Clinton, a rôle for which his fine appearance eminently fits him. Mr Frank Wilmot capably portrays John Meredith, and, if we mistake not, the same gentleman is also seen as the detective Shelton. A very clever sketch of Tagrag is supplied by Miss Hulo Hodgson. Mr Felix Pitt's embodiment of villainy, in this instance Richard Thornton, is a fine piece of acting. The comedy honours again fall to Mr Newman Maurice for his capable rendition of Tom Bates, and Miss Rosemary Rees is deserving of great praise for her pathetic but natural portrayal of Lilian Meredith. The rest of a long cast is suitably filled.

GRAND, WOOLWICH.

On Monday, Oct. 24, the Play, in Five Acts, entitled "ZAZA."

Mrs Lewis Waller and company have been appearing here this week in Zaza, and have played to good houses each evening. Mrs Lewis Waller threw herself heart and soul into her part, and, bringing into play much undoubted histrionic ability, reinforced by considerable acting experience, submitted an impersonation of the character which surely fully realised the author's conception. Zaza's originally careless attitude towards life in general, her artfully artless attempts to secure Dufresne's love, and her final overwhelming passion for him were portrayed in a manner indicative of the true artist's insight into and appreciation of the possibilities of the rôle. The great scene in the fourth act was handled in masterly fashion, and here, as elsewhere throughout the play, Mrs Waller was admirably seconded by Mr Eric Mayne, who scored heavily as Bernard Dufresne. His greatest chance came in the scene above mentioned, when Dufresne, in a sudden revulsion of feeling, curses Zaza for interfering with his wife; and it is not too much to say that Mr Mayne responded fully to the call made upon his ability to express strong emotion. Miss Minnie Rayner was amusing as a clumsy, good-natured, but extraordinarily inefficient, maid; Miss Kate Kearney was responsible for much laughter as Rosa Bonne, a lady with a firm belief in the treatment of "heart trouble;" Miss Alice Langley contributed a sympathetic sketch of Alice Morel; and Miss Ethel Warwick, despite the fewness of the lines allotted to her, cleverly brought out the character of Madame Dufresne. Mr Edmund Lea was effective as Cascart; while Mr J. Spurling as the Duc De Brisac and Mr Edmund Waller as Jacques Rigault did as well as possible with these small parts.

COUNTY THEATRE, KINGSTON.

On Monday, Oct. 24, the Musical Pantomimic Farce "HIS MAJESTY'S GUESTS."

Uproarious laughter resounded throughout the Royal County Theatre on Monday, when this absurd and amusing farce was produced by Mr Fred Karno's company. The central figure of the production, Sergeant Lightning, was impersonated by Mr Dan Rolyat, whose drolleries served to keep the audience in the best of spirits when he was on the stage. Some very well-sung songs were rendered by Mr Walter Balfour, who appeared as Flash Jack, and the vocal efforts of Miss Leonora Castelle, who made a charming Lady Maud Easem, were all very much appreciated. The fun of the play was also contributed to considerably by Mr Harry Howe as Selina and by Mr Victor Knight as the curate Mr Minks. His Majesty's Guests has been revised, and new lyrics and music add considerably to its attractiveness. It was admirably staged in every particular.

PRINCE OF WALES'S, RICHMOND.

On Monday, Oct. 24, the New Sensational Melodrama, entitled "A MODERN JUDAS; OR, THE SERPENT'S TOOTH."

Mr John Denton, besides being author of the above play, acts one of the principal characters therein, and the play is presented by his own company. Mr Harry Brown as Mr James Rivers is an effective "old English gentleman;" Mr Frank Beresford is a manly representative of the hero, Jack Vavasour; and Mr Percy Rhodes is a blood-curdling exponent of the villain, Capt. Melbourne. Mr Denton himself plays Elkanah Pearce and causes much merriment. Miss Ada Palmer is a most amusing Agatha Pearce, a lady who wants to get married. Miss Estelle Despa is good as Mrs Tibbs, and Miss Dolly Harcourt is a pretty and engaging Polly Hopkins. Miss Kate Walbran is excellent as Elise, and last but most important of all Miss Violet King gives a fine rendering of the part of the heroine Claire Rivers. The minor parts are in safe hands, and the play is well mounted.

That there is a large public for melodrama of a stirring type, with plenty of incident and replete with human interest, has been proved this week at the Elephant and Castle, where the general-manager, Mr Ernest E. Norris strong in his belief in the popular love of sensation of the right kind, is catering with such marked success. As a former leading man at the Surrey, Mr Norris has learnt by experience exactly what South Londoners want, and in his latest choice of drama for the attractive transpontine house he directs he is to be heartily congratulated. Messrs Ernest Martin and Fewlass Llewellyn's story grips its hearers from the opening scenes, and although the plot runs on lines that are familiar, there is much clever treatment of the incidents, and the piece winds up with one of the most harrowing sensations that we have seen since Love and Money was produced at the Adelphi on Nov. 18, 1882. Breathless silence has denoted during the week the deep interest of those who have watched so anxiously for the escape of the entombed pitmen, in the last scene of the fourth act, and a crescendo of despair has been followed by clamorous shouts of approval from that section of the British public dwelling "across the bridge," who invariably cheer with no uncertain sound the heroic deeds of any kind, and especially of men who bear the heat and burden of toil. We have had The Silver King, The Cotton King, The Wheat King—why not The Coal King? The title is an excellent one. It belongs by prescriptive right apparently to Sir Reginald Harford, a benevolent colliery owner, whose son Walter, the villain of the piece, is strongly opposed by temperament and character to the just and upright Tom Roberts, mine manager. If there were not a natural antipathy of each to the other pretty Grace Shirley, the village schoolmistress, who favours the suit of Tom, would supply it. The latter, who we need scarcely add is the hero, is gifted with the judicial mind, and is accused of favouring the pitmen too much, but the arguments supporting this contention are somewhat too specious for Sir Reginald. The plotting villain, Walter Harford, therefore, seeks some further and stronger plea for condemning the reputation of Tom. In the second act at the colliery offices Walter endeavours to poison Sir Reginald's mind by actually accusing Tom of robbery, and refers to Dick Shirley, who is in his (Walter's) power, for confirmation of his statements. Shirley lyingly admits that Tom's conduct has been rather strange of late, and Sir Reginald decides to thoroughly investigate the matter. To make his story plausible, and also presumably because he is short of cash, young Harford goes to the safe to abstract some money, but is suddenly confronted by Mad Ann, a mysterious character who has an important bearing on the plot. The would-be thief strikes her a heavy blow, and hearing sounds of someone approaching locks her in the safe. This incident immediately precedes Sir Reginald's interrogation of the hero. Tom manfully defends himself, and at the same time remarks that if his denials of the foul slanders that are uttered concerning him are not to be believed he had better resign his position. The charge of robbery is then brought against him, and the safe is to be examined. Sir Reginald, however, has not the key, but one is immediately supplied by Tom, who opens the safe. Out steps Mad Ann, who, questioned as to who put her there, answers "My son!"—a very effective curtain. We had learnt in an earlier scene that Mad Ann had changed her child for that of Sir Reginald, and that his real son is Tom Roberts, and not Walter Harford. Tom is persecuted in various ways—the villain's schemes being assisted by Shirley, who has put himself in young Harford's power by a confession of forgery in early life—and a diabolical plot to blow up the coal-mine almost fulfils its purpose. By the providence that invariably looks after the safety of melodramatic heroes Tom is saved by a telephone message sent by the now repentant Shirley, and is mercifully preserved to rescue his comrades from the "living tomb," a scene that causes immense excitement. We need hardly say that a happy conclusion is arrived at Tom Roberts's birth and innocence are both acknowledged, and Walter meets with his deserts.

The acting leaves nothing to be desired, the company working throughout most loyally for the piece, which is an undoubted success. Mr Howard Templeton as Sir Reginald Harford pictures the benevolence, uprightness, and judical impartiality of that character in a way that does the actor infinite credit. As the villain, Walter Harford, Mr Bernard J. Liell is careful to give the requisite callousness to the rôle without in any degree overdoing it. He handles the character boldly and skilfully, and the antipathy shown to Harford's evil deeds is well earned. Mr Ernest E. Norris has seldom been better suited with a part than with that of Tom Roberts, the honest, upright, and clear-minded mine-manager. He makes it quite evident to the audience that Tom has won his position by superior intellectual powers and strong common sense. By his fine elocution, by the crystal clearness of his utterance, and by the fine feeling evinced in the chivalrous passages of his dialogue, Mr Norris endears himself to the hearts of the audience, and the ringing cheers that greet him when he comes in front of the curtain must be to him a grateful recognition of work well done. Mr Paige Lawrence gives effective aid by his embodiment of the weak Dick Shirley; and Mr Harry Paulton, jun., in his representation of Jim Williams, a pit hand, who is a sort of amateur Sherlock Holmes, has humorous opportunities of which he does not fail to make the most. He is to be heartily congratulated on an excellent character sketch. Mrs Bennett, who has been a favourite actress in South London for some years, appeals to the sympathy of her hearers in the grateful part of Grace Shirley, the school-mistress, and gives evidence once again of considerable power. An impersonation of weird potency is that of Mad Ann by Miss Judith Kyrle, who has to hide her girlish beauty under the grey hairs and wrinkles of age. She is highly artistic, and shows much ability. Miss Kate Connaught, whom we remember as Niobe, assumes with considerable success the responsibilities of the rôle of Mrs Clarges; and no more delightful parlour maid could be wished for than the Araminta Green of Miss Agnes Paulton. Miss Dora Hargrave as Mrs Baker and Miss Gladys King as Sal Jenkins capably acquit themselves as two of the pitmen's wives; and Miss Blanche Jordan does well as Jane, a village lass. General Clarges is a rôle that is very capably handled by Mr Edwin Bennett. Mr Jo Monkhouse is to be praised for his character sketch of Seth Baker; Mr Dudley Hayes is seen to advantage as Ned Jenkins; and Messrs B. Croucher, W. H. Terry, Edward Snow, and Arthur Wilson add to the success by their care and attention. The piece is finely mounted, the living tomb scene being a triumph of stage craft.

	THE START.

"SIR CHARLES WYNDHAM."

A Biography. By T. EDGAR PEMBERTON. London: Hutchinson and Co., Paternoster-row.

To the sympathetic and cultured pen of Mr T. Edgar Pemberton we are indebted for "A Memoir of E. A. Sothern," "The Life and Writings of T. W. Robertson," and "Ellen Terry and her Sisters," but none of these works surpass in interest or literary craftsmanship the record of the career of Sir Charles Wyndham, a goodly and well-printed volume just issued by the firm of Hutchinson and Co., of Paternoster-row. The fact that the popular actor-manager has himself supplied the author with much information, and in many ways given his assistance in making the biography complete and accurate, considerably enhances the value of the work, which is plentifully supplied with dates, and contains an index that will be much appreciated by the theatrical chronicler. In honouring the chief of light comedians, and in outlining his career, Mr Pemberton, as those who know him as a graceful writer need hardly be told, has not merely collated a set of dry facts about his distinguished subject. He, nevertheless, displays all the accuracy of the careful historian, but into his narrative he has instilled the sympathy of a close friendship, the discrimination of a fine critic, and the polish and brilliancy of an elegant and thoughtful writer. The dominant note of the book is cheeriness. We find it on every page. Sir Charles, indeed, is an invincible optimist; he looks on the bright side of life, and as the record of his well-bestowed charity goes to show, he has always lent a willing ear to the claims of the distressed and afflicted. In the first chapter, "The Overture," Mr Pemberton lightly touches on the chief facts of Sir Charles's early life. He was born at Liverpool on March 23, 1837, and is thus nearly a year older than Sir Henry Irving. He showed a predilection for the stage at a very early age, and after preparatory work at a school at Sandgate, he was promoted to St. Andrews, afterwards being sent to Germany to study at Norwied and Bonn. Thence he went to Paris to learn French, and commenced at King's College his medical studies, these being completed at the College of Surgeons and at the Peter-street Anatomical School, Dublin. In London he triumphantly passed his examinations, and gained his diplomas. He had early flirtations with Thalia at the Cabinet Theatre, King's-cross, and these "did not tend to diminish his desire to abandon medicine and surgery, and devote himself to the art of acting." In late years Sir Charles confessed: "I went on the stage only because I felt I could not settle down to any other career. The drama had entranced me. I fought against it. I tried to resist my dramatic impulses. In the old days, when I was a medical student at King's College, I took some part in various plays, but then the stage was much less attractive than it is now. The actor had always to pose as the humble obedient servant of the public, grateful to it for any favours it might condescend to bestow on him. He had to put his hand next his heart, and bow and meekly thank it for all patronage it might give him. I did not like this. And it proved a rather strong deterrent to my ambition for a time, so I went out to America and through the Civil War, determined to shake off my love of the stage."

We may pass lightly over the young medico's experiences of the American Civil War, which must have been a "terrible ordeal," Mr Pemberton tells us, for a man of Charles Wyndham's "fanciful and romantic temperament." Warfare had no charms or illusions for him, and while he did faithful, helpful work with bandages, splints, and anæsthetics, the "irresistible fairy footlights were siren-like ever beckoning and calling to him," and, returning to New York, he made his first entry on the boards with John Wilkes Booth, subsequently the unhappy assassin of President Lincoln. The new recruit to the stage however, failed to do himself justice, and being, as he considered, dismissed for incompetency, he returned to the army. He was ordered to New Orleans, Port Hudson, and subsequently, on the frustrated invasion of Texas, to serve with his old patron, General Banks. This was the spring of 1864. In the following winter the old longing for the "boards" returned, and, having been lucky enough to obtain an engagement with Mrs John Wood's company, he once more tempted fortune on the stage at the Olympic Theatre, New York. To this day he recalls how earnestly he studied "one of the distressingly long speeches in vogue in those days. It became an absolute torture to him." It made his days miserable and his nights sleepless.

"He thought more of the mere repetition of the words than the author's meaning in them, and it may be (though I never heard him say this) that they had very little meaning. Anyway, when it came to the point, this method of study proved to be disastrous. The palpitating young actor's speech was all about a lovely and equally young lady with whom he was supposed to be desperately in love. Excusing himself for untoward manifestations of his passion, his panegyric commenced with 'Drunk with enthusiasm, I'—and so on to the end of an eloquent explanation. Unfortunately, after he had uttered the first word the would-be comedian's memory forsook him. 'Drunk,' he stammered, and then stood staring vacantly at an audience filled with what Charles Dickens once called an unholy joy. No wonder that he was misunderstood, and once more 'dismissed for incompetency.'"

He little thought in his hour of disappointment that the delightful and accomplished actress would in later years play under his management at the Criterion, and that she would be proud of the privilege. Returing to England in 1865 he procured an engagement at the Theatre Royal, Manchester, in a piece called Her Ladyship's Guardian, in which Mrs Kendal, then Madge Robertson, played the heroine. The principal piece was supplemented by His Last Legs, in which young Charles Wyndham appeared successfully as O'Callaghan, even though his brogue in another Irish character, Shaun the Post, in Arrah-na-Pogue, was considered by one critic as sufficiently bad to justify a Fenian rising. He had some valuable experience in old comedy with Miss Herbert on tour, and played Charles Surface to Henry Irving's Joseph. Eventually he came to London, and made his first professional appearance on the metropolitan stage as Sir Arthur Lascelles, in Morton's well-worn play, All that Glitters is not Gold, on May 21, 1866. In November of the same year he scored a great success as Hatchett, in Burnand's wonderfully popular burlesque on Douglas Jerrold's Black-Eyed Susan. Of Sir Charles's performance in that mirthful production the author (Sir Francis Burnand), in his interesting "Records and Reminiscences," says:—"Charles Wyndham was a wonderful dancer, and however nonsensical might have been what he had to do he was thoroughly in earnest when doing it." How little did author and actor think, in the November of 1866, that the day would come when they would jointly receive their well-won honour of knighthood from the hand of King Edward VII. Long before the finish of the run of the Royalty burlesque Wyndham had found a place in Miss Herbert's company in the production of a piece called Idalia at the St. James's Theatre, where Henry Irving was playing "heavy lead." "What a charming villain Irving was! The only actor I have ever seen who has been able to make villainy on the stage appear, as it should appear, lovable." This is the criticism of Sir Charles on his old comrade. In October, 1867, he was engaged by Alfred Wigan for the opening of the Queen's Theatre in Long-acre, the attraction being The Double Marriage, which proved to be a failure, and gave place to Still Waters Run Deep, which was produced as a stop-gap. In this production Ellen Terry played to admiration as Mrs Mildmay, and Charles Wyndham made a palpable hit as Captain Hawkesley. In December 1867, Henry Irving joined the company, and played for the first time with Ellen Terry in Garrick's shortened version of Taming of the Shrew. In the early days of 1868 John L. Toole became a member of this distinguished band of players, playing Michael Garner in Henry J. Byron's domestic drama Dearer than Life. The cast included Charles Wyndham, John Clayton, Lionel Brough, Miss Henrietta Hodson, and Henry Irving. Another play of Byron's was produced on July 24, 1868. This was The Lancashire Lass, in which Charles Wyndham played the hero Ned Clayton. It was in connection with this play that Charles Dickens spoke with enthusiasm of "a young fellow who sits at the table and is bullied by Sam Emery. His name is Henry Irving, and if that young man does not one day come out as a great actor I know nothing of art." In the August of 1869 Charles Wyndham recrossed the Atlantic, and opened at Wallack's Theatre, New York, as Charles Surface, in an important revival of The School for Scandal, an impersonation that the New Yorkers found to be irresistible. So encouraged was he by his success, that he started an American tour with Miss Louisa Moore as leading lady. Among the attractions were Robertson's comedy of Caste, in which he played Hawtrey to Miss Moore's Esther. The Sam Gerridge was Mr George Giddens, who thus commenced his association with the Wyndham management at a very early period of his career. Coming back to London Chas. Wyndham reappeared at his old home, the St. James's Theatre, on Feb. 25, 1873, in Mr Stephen Fiske's comedy, Rabagas, following this with a provincial tour as Geoffrey Delamayn, the hero of the four-act drama by Wilkie Collins, founded by that brilliant writer on his novel "Man and Wife." The tour was organised by the Bancrofts. An engagement at the Royalty, in which he played Rolando in the old comedy The Honeymoon commenced in October, 1873, and now we arrive at the turning point in Charles Wyndham's career. This was his appearance at the old Court Theatre, Sloane-square, then under the management of the late Marie Litton, in the comedy Brighton, adapted by the late Frank Marshall from Bronson Howard's Saratoga, with which Charles Wyndham had toured in America. Since the memorable night of its production (May 15, 1874) his name has always been associated with the part of Bob Sackett. Brighton, indeed, was the pioneer of the three-act farces that came in later days to be called "Criterion comedy," which the mercurial acting of Charles Wyndham succeeded in building up. Brighton ran for a year at the Court, and was then transferred to the St. James's, being taken to Berlin in 1875, Charles Wyndham acting the part of Bob Sackett in German. His connection with the Criterion was commenced through one of those lucky chances that come to Fortune's favourites. Late in 1875 he was playing the popular Brighton, at Brighton. One morning while seated at breakfast he received a telegram from Tom Smale, long acting-manager to Thomas Thorne:—"Would you care to go in with me in management of a London theatre?" Whilst wondering what he meant, which theatre, what conditions, a second telegram arrived from a leading dramatic agent:—"Will you accept the management of a London theatre?" and the minute after one from Henderson, the husband of Lydia Thompson:—"Will you open here at Criterion next Monday in Brighton, and go in with me in management?" "There was something more definite in this, and I at once went to town to see Henderson. It seemed the Criterion Theatre, which had long been very unlucky, and had grown to be considered an unlucky house, had suddenly closed the previous evening. It had first Byron as manager, then D'Oyly Carte, then Spiers and Pond themselves, and lastly M. Petrie, a Frenchman, till the collapse came. It was easy to discover that the three telegrams related to the same theatre. Spiers and Pond, most reluctant to have the theatre shut up in this lamentable manner, had flown the next morning to the dramatic agent, who had promptly applied to me. Smale had heard of the collapse, and also telegraphed to me on his own account. Both were so reserved in their information that it is no wonder I answered Henderson first, as he had given some particulars. He was a very prompt business man, and propounded his ideas at once. Spiers and Pond were ready to give him the theatre rent free, provided he could open the following Monday with some sound attraction, so he telegraphed to me. I at once set to work to engage my company, and to rehearse, and managed to open with a revival of Brighton three days after, for a month's run. Then Henderson produced a burlesque which was not a success, and so proposed a partnership to commence the following Easter." He commenced at the Criterion on Dec. 27, 1875, with Brighton and The First Night, and soon became a partner with Alexander Henderson. The Great Divorce Case was produced on April 15, 1876; in November, 1876, came Hot Water, adapted by H. B. Farnie from La Boule; and on June 4, 1877, was seen for the first time Pink Dominos, an adaptation by James Albery from MM. Hennequin and Delacour's great Parisian success, Les Dominos Roses, which awakened the susceptibilities of Mrs Grundy. The next production was Betsy, in which Charles Wyndham had no part. We may well pass on to his production of David Garrick in 1886, for in that character his success with the British public has been enormous. In the same year, on May 29, was given the revival of Wild Oats, in which comedy Miss Mary Moore, to whom Mr Pemberton dedicates his work, made her first appearance under the Wyndham management as Lady Amaranth. Much more might be said of this charming history of the brilliant actor and orator; but we need not enlarge on Sir Charles's later achievements, as they are well within the recollection of our readers.

ONE of the sure signs of the near approach of what is generally referred to as "the festive season" is the issue of Messrs Raphael Tuck and Sons' series of Christmas and New Year's cards. The reputation which this firm has gained as the producers of a class of goods so intimately associated with the merriest time of the year is well maintained by their latest collection of cards. The immense variety and the artistic excellence of the designs are more striking than ever; and one marvels at the ingenuity displayed by those responsible for the production year by year of these charming souvenirs. It should be mentioned that for the designs the services of some of the leading artists of the day have been retained, and the utmost technical skill of inventor and printer has been requisitioned in the production of the finished article. It is only necessary to quote a few figures to show the magnitude of the trade carried on by this famous firm. Of Christmas and New Year cards there are issued 1,700 distinct sets, with from two to four separate subjects in each set, giving a total of upwards of 3 500 entirely new designs. The statement that each year has seen novel developments and an advance in the artistic style and general get-up of Messrs Tuck's Christmas cards cannot be gainsaid after an examination of the specimens given in the daintily got-up circular which has been issued with the happily chosen title of "L'Entente Cordiale." In this full information will be found concerning not only the cards, but also the increasing variety of Christmas literature in the form of booklets, block calendars, toy books, and similar lines.

THEATRICAL GOSSIP.

Sir Henry Irving, while at Leicester recently, made some interesting remarks on the Drama. "Truth itself," he said, "is only an element of beauty, and to merely reproduce things vile and squalid and mean is a debasement of art. There is apt to be such a tendency in certain periods of our national life, and men should carefully watch its manifestations. A morose and hopeless dissatisfaction is not a part of true national life. This is hopeful and earnest. It is a bad sign for any nation to yearn for, or even to tolerate, pessimism in its enjoyment. How can pessimism be otherwise than antagonistic to beauty? Life, with all its pains and sorrows, is a beautiful and a precious gift. The dramatist and the actor have the mission to reproduce this beautiful thing, giving due emphasis to those royal virtues and those stormy passions which sway the destinies of men. The scheme of the higher drama is not a game in life to be played with varying success. It should fulfil its intention to interest and amuse, but earnestness, intenseness, and sincerity are in its deeper purpose."

"Hamlet's advice to 'suit the action to the word' must be taken with its corollary, the 'word to the action,' said Sir Henry. "As the mind of the actor is in advance of his action, so his action should be a preparation for his utterance. The eye is quicker than the ear, and it will be found that what to the audience are the most natural—the most seemingly accidental—effects are obtained when the working of the mind is visible before the spoken words fall on the ear. In every moment in which he is on the stage it is possible for an actor accomplished in his craft to convey ideas to the mind—to convey even a running commentary on what is spoken." On the subject of elocution Sir Henry said:—"To appear to be natural you must in reality be much broader than nature. No actor I have known brought elocution to greater perfection than Charles Matthews. His utterance on the stage appeared so natural that one was surprised to find when near that he was speaking in a very loud tone."

Mr Lionel Brough, we are delighted to hear, has returned from his holiday very fit and well, and will be in excellent form at the O.P. dinner in his honour to-morrow. Amongst the guests will be Mr Beerbohm Tree, Sir Squire Bancroft, Sir Francis Burnand, Mr T. P. O'Connor, Mr H. V. Esmond, and Mr Harry Nicholls. Mr Brough has always been foremost in assisting his less fortunate brethren in the profession, and, turning over a file of The Era for 1882, we came across a very kind letter from him asking for help for the widow and children of one William Bunch, an actor who had been appearing in The Mascotte at the Comedy Theatre, and who had died of kidney disease and dropsy. Mr Brough generously put his name down for five guineas, and his appeal in our pages was liberally responded to by many actors, actresses, and managers.

Mrs Gilbert, the veteran American actress, who is now eighty-four, appeared on Monday night at the Lyceum Theatre, New York, in Mr Clyde Fitch's play, Granny, which was specially written for her. Mrs Gilbert was born in Lancashire on Oct. 21, 1821, and went to the United States in 1849. She is known throughout the theatrical world as "Granny" Gilbert. After the run in New York she will take the new play for a tour through America.

Mr Martin Harvey's company was rehearsing The Breed of the Treshams in the Theatre Royal, Edinburgh, on Tuesday, when there was an alarm of fire, and smoke issued between the boards of the stage. The actors and actresses hastily left the theatre, and it was found that some shavings and loose wood beneath the stage were burning. The fire brigade was summoned, but before they arrived the theatre staff had subdued the flames.

Miss Edith Grenfell's play The Red Café, which is founded on Henry Greville's novel, "Les Epreuves de Raïssa," and has been played to crowded houses for some years in the United States, will be shortly presented by the authors at a London theatre, with new scenery and effects. The piece is taken from the same source as Vilma, in which Mrs Lewis Waller has been appearing recently at Manchester and at the Alexandra Theatre, Stoke Newington. A third version, entitled Nadia, by Lady Violet Greville, was produced at the Lyric Theatre, in May, 1892. In this instance Mr Arthur Bourchier played Count Rezof, and the unfortunate heroine was depicted by Miss Olga Brandon.

Various rumours have been afloat as to the founders of the Actors' Benevolent Fund. The following are the facts:—At a meeting of influential managers held at the Lyceum Theatre on May 8, 1882, with Henry Irving in the chair, it was agreed that the chairman and the actors and managers then on the committee of the Dramatic and Musical Sick Fund Association should be placed on the committee of a new Fund for the relief of distressed and decayed actors, to be called the Actors' Benevolent Fund; and the managers of seven London theatres undertook to subscribe, while in management, an annual sum of £100 sterling to the Fund. This was the real origin of the Actors' Benevolent Fund, the object of which was to do away with subscriptions at the stage doors for the unfortunate in the profession.

Mr Robert Arthur, whose pantomimes at the Royal Court Theatre, Liverpool, and other of his provincial houses, also at Kennington, have gained for him a foremost place in this class of entertainment, has fixed on Christmas Eve as the first night at all his four suburban houses. The subjects will be:—At Kennington Aladdin, at the Coronet Red Riding Hood, at the Camden Robinson Crusoe, and the Crown, Peckham, Cinderella. Mr Arthur will this Christmas be responsible for the production of no less than ten pantomimes, giving employment to over three thousand people.

Mrs Charles Lauri called at The Era office on Thursday, and received the balance—amounting to £176 0s. 11d.—of the fund which had been collected by Mr Edward Ledger, the honorary secretary. It will be remembered that the well-known "animal actor," who was married on May 6, 1882, to the accomplished dancer Miss Zanfretta, died on Feb. 11, 1903. Very liberally did the profession support the fund for the relief of his widow, no less than £306 1s. 5d. being subscribed. Mrs Lauri wishes to express her heartfelt gratitude to all concerned in making the fund successful.

Miss Winifred Emery, having recovered from her serious illness, has been engaged by Mr Tree to join his company at His Majesty's Theatre after Christmas to play Beatrice in the revival of Much Ado About Nothing towards the end of January. Born in Manchester in 1862, Miss Emery made her first appearance on the stage in 1875. She is the wife of Mr Cyril Maude, and has three children.

Miss Lily Hanbury and Mr Herbert Gudalla, of 2, Hay-hill, Berkeley-square, are engaged, and will be married in January. It is to be hoped that matrimony will not deprive the stage of one of its brightest ornaments.

Mr H. Beerbohm Tree has sent to Mr C. I. Coltson, the secretary of the Actors' Benevolent Fund, £6 2s. 6d., and Mr Lewis Waller £6, which they have collected by means of making a small charge for their autographs. Sir Henry Irving, Sir Charles Wyndham, Mr Henry Ainlie, and Miss Mary Moore are daily sending postal-orders, which they have received by same.

The fiftieth performance of The Tempest at His Majesty's Theatre was celebrated on Thursday night, when Mr Tree presented to every member of the audience an interesting souvenir in the form of a neatly-bound copy of the play, illustrated with reproductions of oil paintings by Charles A. Buchel. These pictures include Mr Tree as Caliban, Miss Viola Tree as Ariel, Mr Wm. Haviland as Prospero, Mr Basil Gill as Ferdinand, Miss Norah Kerin as Miranda, Mr Louis Calvert as Stephano, Mr Lionel Brough as Trinculo, Mr Lyn Harding as Antonio, and Mr Julian L'Estrange as Sebastian. There are also illustrations of the Shipwreck, the Wood, Prospero's Cave, and the yellow sands. These paintings have been admirably reproduced in facsimile by the Hentschel Colourtype process, the artistic excellence of the work reflecting the highest credit upon the well-known firm of Carl Hentschel, Limited.

The volume is prefaced by "A Personal Explanation" by Mr Tree, who takes advantage of the opportunity to reply to certain criticisms which appeared in print after the production of the Shakespearian comedy at His Majesty's. He remarks—"If our efforts to present this fantasy have been widely and generously recognised by men of letters and by the public at large, they have also called forth the wrath of others, whose vituperation, I prefer to think, has not been due to a desire to baulk high endeavour, but rather to an honest ignorance of the text of the play and to a whole-hearted incapacity to appreciate the spirit of the poet." The writer tersely adds:—"It may be broadly laid down that whatever tends to quicken the imagination of the audience—in fact, to create illusion—is justifiable on the stage. Whatever detracts from the appreciation of the author's work and disturbs the illusion is to be deprecated—is, in fact, bad art." It is worthy of note that the stage directions of the accepted versions of the play are printed in black, and the instructions having reference to this particular production in red. A crowded and enthusiastic audience witnessed the performance on Thursday night, and the favour with which the revival has been received by playgoers is surely in itself a sufficient reply to Mr Tree's captious critics.

Mr Edward Terry was married on Monday morning at Barnes Parish Church to Lady Harris, widow of Sir Augustus Harris. Shortly before eleven o'clock Lady Harris drove to Priory Lodge, Barnes, the residence of Mr Terry, and from thence she and Mr Terry walked to the church together. Lady Harris was dressed in a brown cloth skirt, brown bolero, and yellow silk blouse, and wore a toque trimmed with a yellow feather. The bridegroom wore a beautiful buttonhole in his coat, but Lady Harris did not carry any flowers. No one was present in the church except the daughter of Mr Terry and her husband, Mr Walter Colls. After the ceremony Mr Terry and his bride returned to Priory Lodge for refreshments, and later on left for Stratford-on-Avon. In December Mrs Terry will accompany her husband to the United States on tour.

Sir Augustus Harris bequeathed half his property, amounting to nearly £100,000, to Lady Harris, and the other half to his daughter, Miss Florence Harris, who came of age on the 8th inst. The widow and daughter are also interested in the English performing rights of many popular operas, such as Carmen, Gounod's Romeo and Juliet, and several of Wagner's works.

Sir Henry Irving's historical visit to Sunderland naturally recalls the memory of that grand old Shakespearian actor in the palmy days of Sadler's Wells, William Hoskins, of whose character and career Mr J. F. Hogan gave such an interesting and well-informed narrative in Chambers's Journal, under the title of "Sir Henry Irving's Tutor." Hoskins, it will be remembered, gave young Irving the letter of introduction that led to his début at the Lyceum Theatre, Sunderland. A few days later he sailed for Australia, where for the following thirty years he was a leading actor and manager, particularly excelling in Shakespearian characters. Mr Hogan was personally acquainted with Hoskins during the latter years of his life, when the venerable old actor, very much resembling an aged ecclesiastical dignitary, was conducting a dramatic school in Melbourne.

Mr Auguste Van Biene, at the conclusion of the second act of The Broken Melody at the New Palace Pier, Brighton, on Wednesday night, made the following speech:—"Ladies and gentlemen,—I am sure we have all read, with the supremest disgust, the disgraceful outrage committed by the Baltic Fleet on the innocent, defenceless fishing-boats. Putting aside any political feeling which we may rightly or wrongly hold, I am confident that we, one and all, despise the brutal action, no matter what reason or excuse is or may be offered. I therefore, by way of expressing our sympathy as Britishers with the victims, wish to start a fund towards helping in their hour of need the relatives of the victims of this shameful incident. I will head the list with five pounds, and any subscriptions sent to me here at the Royal York Hotel will be handed by me to the Mayor of Brighton to forward to the Mayor of Hull for distribution in the proper quarter." The speech was received with boisterous enthusiasm, subscriptions being sent to Mr Van Biene's dressing-room before the performance was resumed.

Mrs Edmund Phelps is not encouraging to young people who want to go upon the stage. "If anyone came to me and asked me whether it was wise to become an actor," she says, "I should say 'don't, because the market is overstocked.' The present race of young men look upon acting more for amusement than as a matter of necessity, and, the profession, as a result, is composed of quite a different class of individuals to what existed in my early days. In the past the actor had not the social advantages possessed by the present-day actor. We had an early training, which was most valuable, and I think we worked more for the love of our work, endeavouring to make and hold whatever position we might achieve. To-day a young man or girl jumps into that position, thanks mainly to influence and to the fact that society is more interested in the stage than was the case in the past. This has improved the status of the actor as a professional man, but I certainly regret the lack of seriousness that is shown nowadays in the theatre, and I also deplore the easy way in which, by that influence, the young actor obtains parts to which he is not entitled either by talent or by preliminary training."

Fremantle, the most westerly town in Australia, and the nearest to London, familiar to many English actors and actresses as their first and last calling-place in the Commonwealth, has just been provided with a splendid new theatre, under the style and title of the "King's." It seats 1 500, and is entirely isolated. It was opened on Sept. 27, under the management of Mr J. C. Williamson, the inaugural performance—Monsieur Beaucaire—being given by Mr Beerbohm Tree's touring company, headed by Miss Maud Jeffries and Mr Julius Knight.

The company, by the way, has been the subject of a question in the Western Australian Parliament. The Chief Secretary, who is the theatrical licensing authority at the Antipodes, gave it permission to perform The Sign of the Cross and The Eternal City on Sunday evenings in a theatre at Kilgoorlie, the leading Western Australia goldfield. A member wanted to know why a request from the Holloway company for leave to play Two Little Vagabonds in Kilgoorlie on Sunday nights was refused. The Minister replied that The Sign of the Cross and The Eternal City were sacred dramas, an answer that produced some laughter.

Mr Joseph Jefferson, at the age of seventy-five, has retired from the stage. In an interview the veteran actor said that he had decided not to appear again professionally, although he might give his services occasionally in the great cause of charity. Mr Jefferson's theatrical career began when he was only ten years old. But he denied that his survival of more than sixty years of stage work was due to a vigorous constitution. As a boy he was delicate, and fifty years ago he was denied an insurance policy. But careful living was the secret of a long life.

"We actors," Mr Jefferson said, "like 'the second round of applause'—to be patted on the back around the supper table in a good company of fellow Bohemians after the play. There was poor, dear Artemus Ward—such a delightful fellow, such superb company! When he came to London I said to him, 'Browne—you know his name was Browne—beware of the stage-door and the men waiting to carry you off to supper at Evans's. It's not so much that they'll put you under the table as under ground' and they did. I always had a cab at the door when I was playing at the Adelphi, and got in and put up the window and went home, no matter who was out after me."

That was in 1865, when Jefferson was thirty-five years old. "They were all very kind to me," he continued, "Paul Bedford and the Billingtons and Toole, the latter particularly so. I noted that, for I was on his ground, as it were. Every night at the theatre when I came out dressed for the part old Paul Bedford's basso profundo always met me with the same greeting, and it always amused me:—'And how is my young transatlantic kid?'"

Mr Jefferson recalled how Dion Boucicault remade the old play of Rip Van Winkle, remarking that he himself conceived the weird second act as it is now played, and related an amusing incident of his London engagement:—"Just before Rip was brought out at the Adelphi I went with Boucicault to that theatre one night to see Ben Webster, who was a very good actor. He was playing the part of a miser, and in the third act he opened a safe in the wall of his house, took out some papers, examined them, and put them back. There was a very strained moment of hushed attention through the house, but presently a small voice rang clear from the gallery:—'Wot's in 'em, guv'nor?' The house laughed, you may depend upon it, and Webster was very angry, but Boucicault said it was bad art on the part of the author to leave that small boy in the gallery in doubt as to the contents of the papers."

Mr Jefferson intends to spend most of his time in Florida, fishing, gardening, and painting. His son Thomas will continue to play Rip. He is the fifth of the line of acting Jeffersons from the first, who played with Garrick. In his valedictory message to the public Mr Jefferson said:—"I'm leaving the limelight to go into the sunshine, and I leave a blessing behind me and pray for a blessing before me. It has been dear to me—that life of illuminated emotion—and it has been so magnificently repaid. If I could send an eloquent message to the world I would, but somehow words fail me when I try to say it. I have been doubly repaid by the sympathetic presence of the people when I was playing, and the affection that seems to follow me, like the sunshine streaming after a man going down the forest trail that leads over the hills to the lands of morning."

Mr Frank Bertram, who is touring in Scotland with The Convict's Daughter, tells the following good story:—In December he is producing a new play, entitled Hearts Adrift, and on his way to Glasgow he was using some labels for this play for the carriage windows. At Carlisle the porters were taking tickets, and enquired of two ladies:—"Are you two Hearts Adrift?" "No," was the answer. "We are two Convict's Daughters."

At the last meeting of the members of the Shakespeare Birthplace Trust, a resolution was carried, by a majority of two, in favour of retaining and restoring the cottages in Henley-street, presented to the Trust by Mr Carnegie for demolition, to give additional security to the birthplace. Sir Theodore Martin, who drew up the Act of Parliament regulating the management of the Trust, strongly held that it would be illegal to apply the funds of the Trust to the restoration of these cottages, but, notwithstanding this contention, a majority of the trustees voted in favour of the cottages being retained, and of £400 being spent on their restoration. Sir Theodore has now lodged with the trustees a protest against their proceedings. He asserts that the moneys of the Trust can only be used in maintaining in fit and proper order any houses or lands which are of national interest as being associated with the life of William Shakespeare, or his wife or parents. The cottages, he contends, never belonged to Shakespeare or his family, and on that account it would be illegal to spend upon their restoration any portion of the funds. Sir Theodore declines to undertake the responsibility of committing what he considers a breach of trust.

Mr C. I. Coltson, the secretary of the Actors' Benevolent Fund, gratefully acknowledges the following amounts, viz.:—£5 from T. D., per Mr W. H. Waddington, Theatre Royal, York; £10 from the Belfast Theatrical Charity Gals, per Mr F. W. Warden; £2 12s. 6d. from Wonderland, per Mr J. Woolf; £5 from Mr Robert Arthur, being a tax on theatrical free admission to Kennington Theatre, per Harold Entwistle; £2 14s. 4d. from Mr Cecil Beryl, Theatre Royal, Brighton; and £1 4s. 3d. from Palace Pier, Brighton, per Mr Drew Mackintosh, both amounts being obtained by means of a small tax on free admission.

Miss Lillah M'Carthy, who plays Rosamund Charlton, in The Master of Kingsgift, with so much emotional power, made up her mind to go on the stage several years before she first went to the theatre. She is of Irish descent, and passed her childhood in Gloucestershire, learning in the freedom of the Cotswold Hills to love and appreciate the beauty of nature. To this day she finds that there are only two places which entirely satisfy her sensitive nature—the heart of the country and the stage of a theatre! While she was still in the decimals Miss M'Carthy was taken to a performance of Little Lord Fauntleroy, and only a few years later, when she had reached her middle teens, made her first appearance—not as a little lord, but as a grown up lady.

Miss M'Carthy is chiefly known as having been Mr Wilson Barrett's leading lady. She first entered his company in the spring of 1896, to play Berenice in The Sign of the Cross. This was followed by a visit to America, and she then rejoined Mr Barrett for an Australian tour, being given, young girl as she was, such parts as the Queen in Hamlet, and Emilia in Othello. She afterwards created Zebuda in The Christian King, and Ellula, in The Middle of June, besides appearing in all the leading parts in Mr Barrett's répertoire. She was, it is needless to say, the Nellie Denver when he appeared for the last time on the stage, in The Silver King, at Liverpool. The part of Ellula was written specially for Miss M'Carthy—the name suggests Lillah—and it is her favourite character, giving the opportunity to show her skill in farcical comedy. In the first act of Mr Barrett's sixteenth century play—he intended to have put it on in London, by the way, during his season at the Comedy—Ellula is a light-hearted girl of fourteen, who afterwards disguises as a boy and falls in love with the hero, a dashing young Irishman. Miss M'Carthy is very ambitious and devoted to her work. Fond of sport and out-door life, she spends her rare vacations in fishing, shooting, and riding.

The cast of The Walls of Jericho, the play in four acts by Alfred Sutro, which is to be seen at the Garrick Theatre on Monday, includes Mr Arthur Bourchier, Mr Sydney Valentine, Mr O. B. Clarence, Mr David Domville, Mr H. Nye Chart, Mr Junius Booth, Mr Walter Pearce, Mr Stuart Dennison, Mr F. Cecil, Mr F. G. Knott, Mr Alfred B. Allen, Mr Harrison Carter, and Mr D. Imbert; Miss Kate Sergeantson, Miss Elfrida Clement, Miss Lena Halliday, Miss Mary Venant, Miss June Van Buskirk, Miss Ellice, Miss Muriel Beaumont, and Miss Violet Vanbrugh. Mr Bourchier will devote the receipts on the first night to the funds for the sufferers and the relatives of the victims of the recent Hull disaster.

Miss Julia Neilson and Mr Fred Terry produce at Newcastle, on Thursday, Messrs Paul Kester and Charles Major's romantic drama Dorothy o' the Hall, with Miss Neilson as Dorothy Vernon, and Mr Alfred Kendrick, Mr Malcolm Cherry, Mr Horace Hodges, Miss Bella Pateman, and Miss Adeline Bourne in the cast.

Miss Olga Nethersole, who has taken a lease of the Shaftesbury Theatre, has engaged for the production of Mrs Craigie's play, The Flute of Pan, originally produced at Manchester this spring, a company including Mr Herbert Waring, Miss Annie Hughes, Miss Kate Phillips, Mr Dawson Millward, Mr W. T. Lovell, Mr C. W. Somerset, Miss Frances Ivor, Mr Berte Thomas, and Mr William Farren, jun.

At the first of the new series of revivals by the Mermaid Society at the Royalty Theatre on Monday week The Way of the World will be performed by a company including Mrs Theodore Wright, Mr W. H. Kemble, Mr Nigel Playfair, and Miss Ethel Irving.

A new musical comedy, in two acts, entitled The Shah's New Suit, will be produced at the Court Theatre, on the evening of Nov. 28, in aid of the Incorporated Soldiers' and Sailors' Help Society. The Entertainment Committee includes Princess Louise Augusta of Schleswig-Holstein, Lord and Lady Cheylesmore, and Lady Hillingdon.

Miss Lily Brayton's regrettable illness has caused her part at the Adelphi Theatre to be sustained by Miss Dora De Winton, and the rôle of Maddalena to be played by Miss Constance Robertson, the niece of Mrs Kendal.

Mr Charles Fry, whose eleventh season of Shakespearian matinées opens at the Court Theatre on Nov. 5, numbers some of the cleverest players in London among his pupils. Mr Ben Webster and Mr Hayden Coffin were two of his early "discoveries." Miss Nora Kerrin, the lovely Miranda at His Majesty's, was a later acquisition to the ranks of his excellent company. Miss Lilian Braithwaite must not be omitted from the list; or Mr Louis Casson, who is now at the Adelphi; or Mr Annand, who recently appeared at the St. James's. Mr Fry's performance this year will be given, as usual, on a draped stage, with Miss Olive Kennett once again as the leading lady. Mr Patrick Munro, whose character studies are always so excellent, is a professional reciter, who has been a member of the unique little company for about six years. Mr C. Francis, the low comedian, will only appear in one of the revivals this year—Costard, in Love's Labour's Lost—and Mr Fry himself will take the parts of Iago, Biron, and Cardinal Wolsey.

Miss Kennett made her début with the Irving Dramatic Club, playing Rosalind, in As You Like It, and remained with the club as leading lady for a year or two. She then joined Mr Fry, and gave recitals with him, as she still does, in London and the provinces. She has, perhaps, been most successful at the annual Shakespearian matinées in the character of Queen Katherine, in Henry VIII. Mr Fry is a talented stage-manager. He has a perfect gift for dispensing with "properties," and conducts all the rehearsals without using a prompt book, for he literally knows his Shakespeare by heart.

Mr Charles Collette was the first London actor to appear at a music hall. In 1887, when he was playing Bishopriggs, in Man and Wife, at the Haymarket Theatre, Mr Collette was also singing nightly at the Royal, Holborn, and when appearing as Autolycus in A Winter's Tale, at the Lyceum, he also did a "turn" at the Trocadero. At the now non-existing Opera Comique he represented Sir Hugh De Brass in A Regular Fix, and in addition was seen and heard nightly at the Royal and the Pavilion.

Sir Henry Irving had an intensely enthusiastic reception at the Avenue Theatre, Sunderland, on Thursday night, when he appeared with his company in The Merchant of Venice. Every seat in the theatre, which is capable of holding 2,500, had been booked in advance, and the programme, a special souvenir of the occasion, contained a representation of the casket presented to Sir Henry on Friday and a facsimile of the playbill of 1856, giving the cast of Richelieu, in which, at the old Sunderland Lyceum Sir Henry made his first appearance on any stage. When he came on the stage on Thursday the house rose, and for fully two minutes the applause was continued.

The Britannia Theatre, Hoxton, which some months ago was converted into a music hall, and conducted by Mr Thomas Barrasford on the two houses a-night system, will henceforth be managed by a syndicate, with Mrs Madeleine Barber as manageress. Melodrama will be the staple attraction; and on Monday will be presented a revival of the Drury-lane drama, The Flood Tide, played by a company including Miss Julia Summers, Miss Mildred Cottell, Mr Charles A. East, and Mr J. B. Howe. The play will be followed by a variety entertainment, and the last item on the programme will be the farce, Paddy Rooney's Blunders. Mr J. M. East will be Mrs Barber's business-manager.

"The Master of Kingsgift" is to be withdrawn from the Avenue Theatre after to-night, and the house will again be closed. We understand, however, that Mrs Tom Kelly, the author of the piece has two other plays in readiness, one of which may be produced at a West-end house within the next few months.

Mr Walter Graham, whose ludicrous Mysterious Lilliputians have made such a hit at the Egyptian Hall, is producing a new sketch on his diminutive stage next week. It is called Bunkum by the Sea, and introduces several amusing characters, including a skit on the giant drum-major of the Kilties. Mr Graham has not only to remember the facial expression during his show—for his own head is thrust through the background—but to work the limbs of his little figure and ring down the curtain. He makes up his own "fit-up," and it is as complete, with scenery and footlights, as the largest stage. His future engagements include a tour that was booked by Messrs Nathan and Somers, but for the present he remains at "England's Home of Mystery."

Madame Bernhardt's season at the Berliner Theatre, Berlin, has been a great success. There was not a vacant place in the house each night—with trebled prices—and the audience was as enthusiastic as any artiste could possibly desire. Madame Bernhardt's greatest triumph was perhaps in La Dame aux Camelias, which is an old favourite here, but Fédora, La Tosca, Phèdre, and La Sorcière were not far behind. L'Aiglon, though given twice, interested the public less than the other plays.

Mrs Brown Potter, after her production of the Rev. Forbes Phillips's play, Church or Stage, at the Savoy Theatre, will produce there an English version of I Pagliacci, in which she will play Nedda, Mr Gilbert Hare enacting Canio and Mr Jerrold Robertshaw Tonio. Mr Gilbert Hare and Mrs Potter are now partners so far as regards her Savoy season.

Mr Matthew Brodie has been engaged by Mr George Edwardes to play Napoleon, in The Duchess of Dantzig, in a new company which is being formed to take the place of the original one, which goes to America. The fresh combination opens at the King's, Glasgow, on Boxing night, where they remain one month, followed by a month in Edinburgh, and then on through the big cities.

Mr Fred W. Warden, with characteristic enterprise, has arranged for a flying matinée at the Palace Theatre, Belfast, on Wednesday next, at which Miss Lena Ashwell and her London company will appear in Mrs Dane's Defence. Miss Ashwell, who will be appearing in Dublin during the week, proposes to travel from that city in the morning and return from Belfast by the limited mail train at 5 0 p.m., appearing on the stage at the Theatre Royal, Dublin, at 8·0 o'clock the same evening. As the entire distance travelled is equal to over 200 miles, it will be seen that Miss Ashwell is undertaking no light task.

Mr Robert Henderson Bland's book of poems has been excellently reviewed. It was published three months ago. The young stage-manager at the Avenue started to write even before he started to act. During a two years' engagement at His Majesty's, Mr Bland had the opportunity of showing his skill in making up, for he walked on as Mr Tree's "double" in A Man's Shadow, and succeeded in looking so exactly like him that the stage hands often mistook him for "the Guv'nor." After a season at Drury-lane and several tours, Mr Bland was offered the part of the Duke of Buckingham, in Mrs Tom Kelly's drama, combined with stage-management. He has another book of poems in preparation.

Mr Scott Craven is another young actor who writes successful verses. He also is a graduate from His Majesty's, and is now playing Bernard Mandeville, Mr Fred Kerr's original part, in Letty, on tour. Mr Craven recently returned from a professional visit to America. He has given his book the expressive title of "Poems in Divers Keys."

From the details received by this week's Australian mail, it appears that Mr Mel B. Spurr died quite suddenly from diabetes in Melbourne, where he was giving his monologue entertainment to large audiences in the Athenæum Hall. A few days previously he had contributed an article, "How I Make People Smile," to a local periodical, The New Idea. In this article Mr Spurr expressed his belief that elocution cannot be taught. He once started trying to teach it in London, but soon retired from the business.

Mr E. S. Willard's tour will terminate on Dec. 10, and shortly afterwards he will sail for New York, where he is under engagement to appear at the Knickerbocker Theatre in January.

The revival of Messrs Shirley and Landeck's popular military play Tommy Atkins, so admirably performed by the masterly stock company at the Pavilion Theatre, Mile-end, is proving so successful—playing to record business nightly—that the management decided to continue the run during the present week.

In view of Messrs Alfred Northway and W. V. Garrod's forthcoming revival of The Sledge-Hammer, it is interesting to know that the late Wilson Barrett, when disposing of the piece to Mr G. M. Polini, remarked "I'm letting you have my best work." The revival, which takes place on Dec. 19 at the West London Theatre, will be on an elaborate scale, and a long tour has been booked.

Mr Chas Cruikshanks, at the trial of Wm. Grimstone Monkhouse on the 21st inst. at Scarborough, attended to watch the case, as secretary, on behalf of the Actors' Association.

The production of Othello at the Court Theatre on Nov. 16 will be under the direction of Mr Norman Partriege, the well-known Shakespearian actor, who will be remembered in connection with Mr Osmond Tearle's Shakespearian revivals.

Messrs Hans Andresen and Max Behrend will open their season on Monday, Nov. 7, at the Great Queen-street Theatre, with Die Grossstadtluft, a farce, in four acts, by Oscar Blumenthal and Kadelburg. It will be played for one week and a matinée, and will be followed by Einsame Menschen, by Gerhart Hauptmann, on which occasion Fräulein Elsa Gademann, the wife of Herr Direktor Andresen, will make her welcome reappearance; and Sein Prinzesschen, by G. S. Perasini. In rehearsal Messrs Andresen and Behrend have Traumulus, Gerhart Hauptmann's Rosa Berndt, Das Thal des Lebens, by Max Dreyer; Ein Tropfen Gift, by Oscar Blumenthal; and Jugenfreunde, by Ludwig Fulda. Messrs Andresen and Behrend, supported by their entire company, will appear at the Midland Hotel Theatre, Manchester, on Monday, and will play there for one week prior to the opening of their season in London.

Miss Elizabeth Bessle, well known as a touring manageress, an actress an adaptor, and a journalist of no mean ability, is, we are sorry to say, lying ill. She has been writing an article, entitled "A Hospital for Brain-Workers." She advocates the founding of "homes" in connection with our hospitals, where the fees would not be more and not less than two guineas. She opines that the ordinary hospital is no place for the sensitive brain-worker. She asks "What becomes of our brain-workers of limited means in times of serious illness? What provision is there for our less wealthy authors, actors, musicians, when sickness takes them from their work, to which, without peace and scientific nursing, they have but little chance to return?" Miss Bessle would like to hear from anyone interested in this question. Her address is 40, Grove-end-road, St. John's Wood, N.W.

Mr Martin Chapenter, who has been at Egyptian Hall since August, is a young conjuror who excels in straight tricks, his cleverest "sleights" being accomplished with four full-size billiard balls. The idea of becoming a modern magician first occurred to young Chapenter when he was a boy of eleven, and a great admirer of a man on the beach at New Brighton, near Liverpool, who performed the old trick with cups and balls. Having solved the mystery of how it was done, he began to practise at home, using ordinary china cups and a small india-rubber ball. Mr Chapenter has never received a lesson in his life, and hardly knew the difficulties he had overcome until, in after years, a certain well-known conjuror complimented him on his exceedingly neat and clever performance.

When Mr Maskelyne goes to the St. George's Hall at Christmas for the production of The Coming Race Mr Chapenter and others will carry on a series of performances at Egyptian Hall for a month at least, the programme including Mr Graham's Lilliputians and the successful illusion Well, I'm ——. Miss Cassie Bruce, who has so long been the only lady in the bill at Egyptian Hall, is to act a specially written part in Messrs Maskelyne and Christie Murray's play at St. George's Hall—that of the boy Taë, who acts as the hero's guide and friend in the land of "the coming race."

MARTIN HARVEY AT EDINBURGH.

Mr Martin Harvey, who has been appearing this week at the Theatre Royal, Edinburgh, was entertained at luncheon on Thursday by the Edinburgh Philosophical Institution Dramatic Society, in the local Carlton Hotel. The chair was occupied by the president of the society (Mr R. C. H. Morison), and among those present were the Lord Provost Sir Robert Cranston, Miss J. Martin Harvey, Messrs P. M. Macintyre, advocate; J. B. Sutherland, S.S.C.; Wm. Finlay, S.S.C.; George Stenhouse, David Patrick, LL.D.; J. Finlayson Gauld, vice-president of the society; J. C. Newlands, Maurice Isaacs, Archibald Dane, A. N. Duncan, J. A. Aikman, Percy Cooke, R. W. Calder, Harry Nathan, hon. secretary and treasurer of the society; Mrs M'Intosh, Mrs R. C. H. Morison, Mrs Gauld, Mrs Ezard, Mrs Low, Miss Frances H. Durham.

The CHAIRMAN, in proposing the health of "The Guest," recalled how he had first seen Mr Martin Harvey on the stage seven or eight years ago as a member of Sir Henry Irving's company, and remarked upon the hard work which it had been necessary to pass through in order to bring him to such a high position in the profession. He mentioned among his notable characters Sydney Carton, in The Only Way; the Gentle Count, in A Cigarette Makers Romance; Napoleon, in The Exile; and that very beautiful impersonation from the dramatisation of Hans Anderson's exquisite creation, Ib, in Little Christina. As factors in bringing about his success, Mr Morrison remarked upon Mr Harvey's artistic temperament and heredity, reminding the company that he was equally ready in picturing his ideas on the canvas as on the stage.

Mr HARVEY, in responding, said he had heard that this was the first time the society had ventured upon hospitality of such a kind, and it was a dreadful thing for himself and his wife to think that they were the unworthy cause of starting so estimable a body on a career of dissipation which would inevitably carry them, step by step, on their downward course. He interlarded his remarks with evident purpose, with numerous quotations from Hamlet, and excused this peculiarity of his speech by the fact that in his leisure moments he was supposed to be rehearsing the play. He hoped, he said, to produce it on Nov. 21 at Dublin, and if any of the company present were interested in the controversy as to whether Bacon or Shakespeare wrote Hamlet, he recommended them on the morning of Nov. 22 to visit the graves of both, and to make certain that whichever of the two had turned in his narrow bed was the real author. Adverting to the chairman's reference to imbibe Sir Henry Irving, he said it was his inestimable privilege to receive his training at the hands of Sir Henry, and to imbibe his love for his work; all his respect for it; all his lessons of endurance and patience; and all his belief in the efficacy of concentrated purpose, not to mention what little knowledge of the technique of his work he possessed.

Mr J. B. SUTHERLAND, S.S.C., proposed the toast of "The Lord Provost, Magistrates, and Council."

Sir ROBERT CRANSTON replied, and recalled the time when Sir Henry Irving first appeared in Edinburgh. Ever since then the city had been ready to welcome such talent as that found in Mr Martin Harvey. Edinburgh audiences might not, as did those in London, rise up and applaud enthusiastically, but they preferred to sit still and drink it all in, and in that way they appreciated more highly what they saw and heard.

HENRY IRVING AT SUNDERLAND.

PRESENTATION OF A CASKET.

Sir Henry Irving made his first appearance on any stage in Sunderland in 1856, when he was between eighteen and nineteen years of age. By the assistance of William Hoskins, a leading actor at Sadler's Wells, he obtained an engagement with Mr E. D. Davis, of the Lyceum Theatre, Sunderland, where Irving played the part of Gaston, Duke of Orleans. Mr Alfred Davis enacted Richelieu, Miss De Clifford was the Marion De Lorme, and a Mr Edouin was the second secretary; and also represented a Monkey in the burlesque of The Enchanted Lake, which followed Bulwer Lytton's play. The association of the eminent actor with Sunderland was commemorated on Friday by a presentation to him of a casket containing addresses of welcome. The casket is of solid silver, richly gilded. It is rectangular in form and treated in the style of the Renaissance, and panelled and interspersed with figure supports finely modelled and cast. The centre contains a portrait of Sir Henry Irving in enamels, under this is an ornamental panel bearing the inscription of presentation, which reads as follows:—

"Presented to Sir Henry Irving, Kt., Litt. D., LL.D., by the inhabitants of the County Borough of Sunderland, Oct. 28, 1904.

"H. J. TURNBULL, Mayor

"FRAS. M. BOWEY, Town Clerk."

Local views showing the Wearmouth-bridge and the municipal buildings appear on each side. The casket is relieved at the corners by scroll work. At one end is a figure of "Fame," and at the other a figure representing "Welcome." The reverse, which is suitably panelled, also bears an inscription:—"Sunderland Shakespeare Society welcome Sir Henry Irving, Kt., Litt. D., LL.D., on his second visit (27th, 28th, and 29th October, 1904) to Sunderland, where he made his first appearance in the new Royal Lyceum Theatre, 29th September, 1856."

Above this is the Irving coat-of-arms, boldly carved, chased, and enamelled, and at the sides of this views of Stratford-on-Avon. On one end of the casket is a monogram, 1856, and ornamental ribbon work bearing the titles of the pieces Sir Henry played in on his first visit in that year:—Richelieu, The Enchanted Lake, and Lady of Lyons, and below, "Lyceum Theatre, Sunderland." On the other end appears 1904 as monogram, and titles of plays announced for the present visit:—The Bells, Waterloo, Becket, and The Merchant of Venice, and under these "Avenue Theatre, Sunderland." The lid is boldly domed and fluted, and has Shakespeare's crest modelled in full relief at each of its corners. The masks of Tragedy and Comedy are shown at the foot of a well-modelled figure of the Muse which surmounts the casket. The whole is placed on a solid plinth make from oak of great antiquity grown on the banks of the Wear.

SUNDERLAND CASKET.

The casket was presented to Sir Henry at a reception and luncheon at the Town Hall, Sunderland, on Friday, by the MAYOR, with the following address:—

"To Sir Henry Irving, Kt., D.Litt., (Cambridge and Dublin), LL. (Glasgow).

"Sir,—On behalf of your numerous admirers and friends in the County Borough of Sunderland, we desire to offer you a warm and affectionate welcome to the town in which you commenced your career in the profession of which you are now the acknowledged head.

"In all ages the stage has been a potent force in moulding the convictions and shaping the aspirations of men—equally a means of instruction, amusement, and ethical purpose; and the personality of an actor who, to the skill of his special art, adds the feeling and inspiration of the artist, becomes a powerful influence for the advancement of culture. Still more is this true when the actor chooses to become the interpreter and exponent of the Shakespearian drama, the glory of our English literature.

"We have learned with regret that the stage is soon to lose your active service, and that the present must be regarded as a farewell visit. Fifty years will soon have passed since first you stepped upon the boards of the Lyceum Theatre in Sunderland, and we recognise that after your strenuous labours you have a just claim to a period of repose and quiet enjoyment. To remind you of our association with our town we present you with this Address and Casket, on which are engraved scenes familiar to us all, with an expression of the hope that you may long be spared to wear the laurels you have so well earned and to enjoy the esteem and admiration of your fellow countrymen.

"H. J. TURNBULL, Mayor,
and Chairman of the Reception Committee.
"J. G. KIRTLEY, Treasurer. "FRAS. M. BOWEY, Town Clerk.
"CHARLES BEVAN, Hon. Secs.
"JOHN ROBINSON,
"Sunderland, Oct. 28, 1904."

Amongst the invited guests besides Sir Henry were Mr Bram Stoker, who responded to the toast of "Dramatic Art;" Mr H. J. Loveday, Miss Maud Fealy, Miss Wynne-Matthison, Mrs Cecil Raleigh, and Miss Lena Ashwell.

In answer to the presentation of the casket by the Mayor, Sir HENRY IRVING made the following speech:—The great honour you have done me to-day makes me very proud to know that in the history of this famous centre of maritime industry you keep a place for the art which I have served all my life. You are kind enough to remember that here in Sunderland I made the beginning—the boyish and timid beginning—of my career. It is a long time ago, close upon half a century, and I cannot flatter myself that any of you—even the oldest—have any personal recollection of that event. Indeed, I may say with confidence that I am the only person who is qualified to give a plain, unvarnished account of what happened here on the night of Sept. 18, 1856, when the play of Richelieu was produced at the Lyceum Theatre; and not only that evening is vivid in my memory, but the whole preceding fortnight, for such was my eagerness to lose no opportunity, to leave nothing to chance, that I arrived in Sunderland before the theatre was built. The first night was passed at an hotel, and there, too, my advent was premature. The magnificence of hotels was not suited to that period of my apprenticeship, so I took a lodging a mile or two out of the town, and walked in every morning to superintend the building operations, and to wonder how on earth they would be finished for my first appearance on any stage. Well, the builders did finish their work—perhaps, after all, they keew what was at stake—and Richelieu was prepared with most disconcerting haste, and the boy, full of trembling hope, saw the curtain which shielded him from the audience rise abruptly, and then he had to speak the opening words of the play, "Here's to our enterprise." Gaston, Duke of Orleans, is represented by the dramatist as a bit of a craven, but he could never have been so frightened of the Cardinal as he was of Sunderland when he tried to utter those words! I cannot truthfully say—for I feel the responsibility of being the only witness—I cannot truthfully say that he did utter them. "Our enterprise," my enterprise, stuck in his throat. At any rate, it made entirely the wrong impression, for one critic of that performance urged the actor to take the first steamer back to his comfortable home, and abandon all idea of pursuing a vocation for which he was manifestly unfitted. I remember so well that the "first steamer" was recommended, not the first train, and I suppose the critic wanted to associate my penitential departure with the thriving sea traffic of your great port, and so point the contrast between my final discomfiture and your increasing prosperity. Certainly the voyage would have given me ample time to ponder the enormity of my presumption. But I did not go. I stayed here five months, learning useful lessons of perseverance by the helpful kindness of my old manager, Mr. E. D. Davies, and of the Sunderland playgoers, whom I found to be extremely patient, for they received me with the utmost good humour in the singing part of Henry Bertram, for which my confiding manager had cast me, as adequate support to Charlotte Cushman in her great character of Meg Merrilies. Well, there came a time long after, when I was able by a happy coincidence to carry on at another Lyceum the enterprise which had faltered at the outset, and to make that theatre, I hope, a not unworthy home of dramatic art for thirty years. You have been good enough to speak of this work of mine with very warm appreciation, and I take the most gratifying welcome you have given me to-day as signal testimony to the importance of the Drama in our social life. I have long regretted that in this country the Theatre is not, as it is in some other countries, an organised department of the State or the municipality, for I think it should be a civic obligation to maintain a standard of dramatic taste. No hostility to the Drama has ever been strong enough to eject it from the lives of the people. It has been preached at: philosophers have disdained it: it has been declared unworthy of serious and sober-minded persons. All this has gone on for centuries without damaging the Theatre beyond repair. It seems highly probable that centuries hence moderately virtuous citizens will still be found waiting at the pit door, where, as Charles Lamb tells us, he would rather jostle his neighbours than wander over a pastoral landscape with the shepherd and his sheep. There is an unquenchable desire in most of us to see the human comedy in its infinite variety reflected on the stage. The mirror has been held up to Nature for all time by a master dramatist, and in the genius of Shakespeare we behold an ever-living world. But I say it would be well if the Theatre could be so organised as to keep its best standards constantly in the public eye. It is at least as worthy of that distinction as a museum. The treasures of a museum are precious, but inanimate. They have the advantage—if it be an advantage—of not exciting controversy except amongst the learned collectors. The Drama is alive and lends itself furiously to dispute, as, in the course of a long life, I have had reason to know. But none the less some of us have striven to serve it, in one form or another, with unfailing belief and honest devotion. I am deeply grateful to know that such a purpose and ambition steadily maintained has won your esteem here in the town where I first strove to set foot on the lowest rung of the ladder. But it gladdens me still more to believe that your sympathy with the work I have been able to accomplish is a token of a real and abiding love of the Drama, a love which, I trust, will be handed down as a tradition and an inheritance to generations yet to come. So this beautiful casket, Mr Mayor, and the address which you have read, I shall always cherish as memorable tokens of my old associations with Sunderland, and of your kindly interest in my work. One of the inscriptions on the casket, I am glad to note, is signed by Mr John Robinson, as President of your Shakespeare Society—I may say our Shakespeare Society, for you are a branch of the British Empire Shakespeare Society, to which I have the honour to belong. I have had personal relations with many Shakespeare societies in my time, and have always regarded them as missionaries of humanity. For the study of Shakespeare is not the study of a writer who, with all his greatness, is remote from our own time and our own affairs. Shakespeare is alive in our thought; his speech is ever on our lips; and to enter truly into his spirit is to learn unending lessons of that noble charity which is the highest inspiration of our religion. I do not think you can carry on this study without recognising that Shakespeare's plays were meant to be acted, and that some trained interpretation of them is necessary to the credit of the English stage. There are students, it is true, who tell you that to act Shakespeare is really a profanation. What offends them most I believe, is that the modern theatre employs resources of scenic effect which the Elizabethan theatre did not possess, and they are so desperately Elizabethan, these gentlemen, that if they cannot have Shakespeare with the old placard, "This is a street," they would rather not have him at all. From this little eccentricity, Mr Mayor, I judge our friend Mr Robinson and his fellow-students to be quite free. And I gather, too, that our Shakespeare Society does not hold the theatre to be a vain show unless Shakespeare happens to be always going on. A broad and healthy interest in the drama is surely no small part of the heritage which our greatest dramatist has bequeathed to us. This, Mr Mayor, is why I value so highly the gratifying proofs I have received to-day that the Theatre has such staunch supporters in you and your fellow-townsmen, and that my small share in its history has been rewarded by your esteem and goodwill. This day puts an indelible seal upon an old friendship, and you have made me feel that in spirit and in comradeship I am a Sunderland man.

ROYAL OPERA, COVENT-GARDEN.

On Friday, Oct. 21, Carmen was performed, Signor Caruso for the first time appearing as Don José. His beautiful voice was heard to the greatest advantage in the popular opera, and he sang to perfection the "rose song" in the second act, and his acting as the jealous lover was extremely fine. The costume of the Spanish soldier was not very picturesque. The heroine was sustained by Signora Gianolo, a lady well versed in all the traditions of the part, but to some extent deficient in the charms supposed to lure the soldier hero to destruction. Signora Gianolo was better in the card scene and the tragic duet leading up to the final tragedy. As Escamillo Signor Amato displayed the requisite skill and won the customary approval in the "Toreador" song. Signor Neale was an efficient Dancairo and the humour of Remendado was fully brought out by Signor Paroli. As Micaela Miss Alice Nielsen gave a pleasing version of the character, and other parts were efficiently sustained. Signor Campanini secured a satisfactory ensemble, and Carmen, as usual, attracted a very large audience.

The fact that Un Ballo in Maschera was originally written for the San Carlo, Naples, and was not produced there owing, in a great measure, to the rivalry of Mercadante then one of the most popular Italian composers, gave a singular interest to the performance of the opera on Wednesday. It is now generally known that Auber's opera Gustavus the Third had the same libretto as Un Ballo in Maschera, but when the score was sent to the San Carlo the state of Italian politics was unfavourable to the subject. The assassination of a ruling monarch could not be tolerated by the officials, and consequently the scene was changed to Boston, and instead of the King of Sweden, as in Auber's opera, being the victim, he became Governor of Boston, United States. Verdi, disgusted with his treatment at Naples, went to Rome, where Un Ballo in Maschera was brought out in 1859. Afterwards it was produced at Drury-lane and at Her Majesty's, and last year, after long neglect, it was revived at Covent-garden, the almost forgotten work of Verdi being recognised as one of his best. The representation on Wednesday was undoubtedly one of the finest the San Carlo company has given. The performance all round was thoroughly artistic, and the acting and singing of the principals deserved the utmost credit. Signor Vignas has done nothing better during the present season than Riccardo, the victim of the conspiracy, and as Renato Signor Sammarco, the brilliant baritone, greatly distinguished himself as a vocalist and actor. Signora Buoninsegna was splendidly effective in the difficult character of Amelia. No artist that we can remember in the past has more perfectly succeeded. The Sorceress, who is more important in Auber's opera than in Verdi's, was well sustained by the handsome contralto, Madame Cisneros; and Mdlle. Trentini as Oscar, the sprightly page, who has such pretty music to sing, did ample justice to the music, being also as gay and animated as the situations required. Mdlle. Trentini gained enthusiastic and well-merited applause. Commendation is due to the orchestra and chorus, under the direction of Signor Tanara. There was not a single fault to find, and we may speak of the performance of Un Ballo in Maschera as one of the most artistic and complete yet given by this company. It is no slight compliment to pay this excellent troupe to say that every performance raises them in public estimation.

A matinée on Thursday was devoted to Puccini's Tosca, but the more attractive La Bohème, by the same composer, was given in the evening to a splendid audience, filling the grand theatre to its utmost capacity. The fine qualities of the San Carlo company are now generally recognised, and it is beyond question that never has any autumn opera season been so well supported. La Bohème, popular from the first, is now accepted as one of the most sparkling, tuneful, and characteristic of modern operas, and on Thursday it was received with greater warmth than ever, the representation being admirable in every way. Signor Caruso was in fine voice and exerted himself to the utmost to make Rodolfo effective. He never sang better, and in his acting Signor Caruso fully realised the genial character of the gay young student. Miss Alice Nielsen appeared as Mimi with complete success, her rendering of the music revealing high qualities of pathos and passion. As the whimsical Musetta Mdlle. Trentini proved herself equal to her graceful task, and the scene at the Café lost nothing in humour. The merry Bohemians were sustained by Signor Amato, Signor Arimondi, and Signor Viale with excellent effect, and the careful and zealous conducting of Signor Tanara resulted in an admirable ensemble, the band and chorus being always competent.

IN Berlin an animated discussion is being carried on respecting the hour at which theatrical entertainments commence in that city. Places of amusement there begin their performances at half-past seven, or even at seven o'clock, and finish at from a quarter to half-past ten. As most businesses in Berlin do not close before half-past six or seven o'clock, business men have no time to dress or dine before going to the theatre. Evening dress is most unusual in the Berlin playhouses, and smoking-jackets and cycling-suits may be seen side by side in the stalls.

THE audience at Covent-garden on Thursday night included Lord Lansdowne, Lady Evelyn Cavendish, Lady Charles Beresford, Lord and Lady Brassey, Baron and Baroness de Meyer, Prince and Princess Victor Duleep Singh, Count Albert Mensdorff, and Lady Lister-Kaye.

STAGE STAFF GOSSIP.

(SPECIAL TO THE ERA.)

Mr A. E. Wood presided at a well-attended meeting of theatrical carpenters on Sunday evening in the Salisbury Tavern, St. Martin's-lane. Several candidates for membership were elected. It was decided that the "special benefits," recently adopted, be left open, irrespective of age, to lapsed members until the next general meeting in November. After that date the age limit for admission to the funeral fund benefit will come into operation. Carpenters out of work should register their names in the "unemployed" book. Mr A. Palmer, the secretary, will be glad to supply particulars of the society's benefits.

At the commodious painting rooms of the Crown Theatre, Peckham, Mr Cecil Hicks and a large staff of assistants are busy getting the scenery ready for the Coliseum.

The fireproof curtain at the Crown Theatre can now be worked from the stage door. The house is fortunate in having what Mr Cecil Paget has described as the "one-and-only-downright-stick-at-his-post hallkeeper." The "sprinkler" can also be worked from the hallkeeper's office.

The recent accident with the "sprinkler" at the Lyric Theatre is likely to prove expensive. The orchestra has put in a claim for damage to instruments and apparel, and there are other claims made by the company.

The joint concert committee have secured the services of Sir Alexander Mackenzie to conduct the orchestra at the concert at the Royal Opera House on Nov. 20. Her Grace the Duchess of Leeds has consented to be a patron, and his Grace the Duke of Bedford has placed his private box at the disposal of the concert committee. Almost all the West-end theatre managers have consented to their names being added to list of patrons, and several have applied for tickets. The committee has arranged to provide a souvenir programme, and report a great demand for tickets.

The national committee of the Theatrical Employees' Society met twice this week. It is proposed to call a meeting early in November, when matters affecting the rules of the society will be discussed.

Mr J. Rodgers, who has filled the position of stage-manager at the Newcastle Pavilion, has been transferred to the Glasgow Pavilion, under the same management, to take up similar duties. Before leaving the Newcastle hall he was presented last Saturday with a handsome signet ring and a purse of gold from the members of the staff as a mark of esteem. The presentation was made by the popular manager, Mr Will H. Boardman, in a few well-chosen words and Mr Rodgers suitably responded.

THE MUSICIANS' COMPANY.

The Musicians' Company gave a dinner on Tuesday night at the Albion Tavern, Aldersgate-street. Mr W. C. Herring, the Master, took the chair, and the company included Mr W. H. Allen (High Sheriff of Bedfordshire). Mr W. H. Battle Sir Frederick Bridge the Hon. Claude Hay, M.P., Mr J. E. Borland, Mr C. T. D. Crews (Master-elect), Sir Edward Letchworth, Colonel Yates Browne, Dr. W. H. Cunmings, Mr E. E. Cooper (Senior Warden-elect), Sir Homewood Crawford (Junior Warden-elect) Mr Galloway M.P., Mr G. H. Heilbuth (chairman of the Music Committee of the Corporation) Prince Moorut Ulee Meerza, the Hon. Leopold Canning Mr C. B. Edgar (Mayor of Richmond), Sir George Martin, the Rev. Robinson Duckworth (the Chaplain), the Rev. R. H. Hadden, Mr E. Markham Lee, Sir Ernest Clarke, Mr J. Wrench Towse (Clerk to the Fishmongers' Company), and Mr T. C. Fenwick (the Clerk). After the toast of "The King" had been honoured the chairman proposed the toast of "Queen Alexandra, the Prince and Princess of Wales, and the Other Members of the Royal Family," and remarked that in opening the exhibition of the Musicians' Company this year the Prince and Princess of Wales had done much for music and musicians. The toast of "The Imperial Forces" was enthusiastically received. The Master then announced that the company had been presented by Colonel T. B. Shaw-Helier with a banner on which was worked a picture of St. Cecilia. Mr Henry Geehl was presented with the silver medal of the Musicians' Company, which is competed for yearly at the Guildhall School of Music. Sir Ernest Clarke proposed "The Houses of Parliament." Mr Galloway, M.P., responded to the toast, and said that he was glad to be able to state that he had that day had a very satisfactory interview with the Prime Minister in regard to the copyright of music, and he hoped that in the next Session of Parliament the grievous injury from which musicians were suffering would be removed. Sir Homewood Crawford gave the toast of "The Great City Companies." He alluded to the support the Musicians' Company had received from the Fishmongers' Company and the other great City Guilds in connection with the musical exhibition. Mr J. Wrench Towse replied. The toast of "The Worshipful Company of Musicians" was submitted by Dr. W. H. Cummings, who remarked that the company was doing what it could to advance the art of music in different ways. The Master, in reply, stated that at a court of the company it had been unanimously resolved to present Dr. Cummings with the freedom of the company. He also announced that Mr Carnegie had given a $5,000 bond to the company, and it had been decided to arrange for two scholarships at the Guildhall School of Music, and that night Mr Crews, the Master-elect, had presented them with a loving-cup.

AMUSEMENTS IN SOUTH AFRICA.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

EAST LONDON, Oct. 1.—Town Hall.—The Westminster Glee Party have been playing to good houses for two nights and a matinée. Amongst those who appeared special mention must be made of Madame Marie Hooton, who has an exceptionally good voice; Mr Edward Branscombe, Mr Haydn Fraser, Mr W. Llewellyn, Masters A. H. Ludlow, G. T. Travis, A. G. Bates, and W. C. Edgley, who were all repeatedly encored. Mr Dudley Cranston, society entertainer, was heartily received. The performance is under the personal supervision of Mr Edward Branscombe, who is ably assisted by Mr Nigel Brock as business-manager.

When the action of Glover v. E. Hulton and Co., was called in the King's Bench Division on Thursday Mr Walter Frampton said that he appeared with Mr Charles Bray for the plaintiff, Mr James Glover, the well-known musical director at Drury-lane. It was an action to recover damages for libel as Mr Glover had reason—or thought he had—to complain of a certain paragraph which appeared in the Manchester Evening Chronicle. Counsel had seen Mr Shee and Mr M. Smith, who appeared for the defendants, and they repudiated any suggestion of libel, and said that the writer and the proprietor of the paper held Mr Glover in the highest esteem, and never dreamed of reflecting on him. With that Mr Glover was quite satisfied, and, with his lordship's consent, the record would be withdrawn. Mr Shee, K.C., repeated that there was no intention of libelling the plaintiff, and the defendants were glad to hear that he had not suffered in any way. The record was accordingly withdrawn.

A committee meeting of the Touring Managers' Association will be held at 3, Bedford-street, on Friday, Nov. 4, at 12·30 o'clock.

Managers interested in Melbourne theatres were up in arms last September, when the State Premier announced that the Government of Victoria proposed, as part of a scheme of economical reform, that there should be a tax on amusements. Every person attending a theatre was to be taxed at a rate to vary according to the part of the theatre visited. Those who patronised the gallery would have to pay, say, a penny, while dress circle visitors would be taxed at 3d. per head. It was suggested that the theatregoers themselves should pay the tax by affixing a stamp upon their tickets. Messrs J. C. Williamson, George Tallis, H. Rickards, and E. Collins (the latter representing Mr George Musgrove) waited upon the Premier Mr Bent, and pointed out that such a scheme would be unworkable and that if adopted it would tend to lessen their profits, as many people would be disinclined to submit to the inconvenience of such a cumbersome arrangement. The managers contended that instead of introducing obstacles such as the proposed tax, efforts were necessary to place greater facilities in the way of theatre patrons. Mr Williamson argued that it was unfair to make class distinctions when imposing a tax, and that the theatrical profession did more for the public charities than any other section of the community. He also pointed out that the local theatrical and musical professions supported their own poor, and thereby the State was relieved of an expenditure of no mean total. Mr Bent did not give the deputation of managers the satisfaction of a definite reply, but it is understood a less vexatious means of taxation will be devised.

At the usual weekly meeting of the council, held last Tuesday, Frank Lynden was nominated as a candidate for election as a member of the Actors' Association. The secretary reported that he had attended the Scarborough Quarter Sessions on the trial of a person charged with obtaining money by fraudulent representations, and watched the case on behalf of the Actors' Association, and the prisoner, being found guilty, was sentenced to five months' imprisonment. The hon. solicitors read an opinion given by counsel, advising the Council to proceed no further in the matter of a claim made by a member against a railway company. He also reported having advised several members on points submitted. A question as to the re-election of the hon. medical officers having arisen, the secretary received instructions in connection therewith. The secretary reported a case of alleged bogus management. The Council instructed the secretary to advertise the fact that members who have not tendered their resignations previous to Jan. 1 in any year are liable for the subscription payable for that year, and to post a notice to that effect in the general office of the Association. The Chairman of the Finance and General Purposes Committee reported that notwithstanding the increase in the annual subscription and the prediction that such increase would not find favour, 1,463 members had paid their subscriptions for the current year.

When H.R.H. the Princess of Wales visited Kings Lynn last week for the purpose of collecting purses for her new nursing home Mr Howard was one of those who generously subscribed towards the movement. The purse which he gave was presented to her Royal Highness by the daughter of Mr G. Bullen, a well-known and influential resident of King's Lynn.

Miss Florence Redfern, who undertook the part of Rosebud, at an hour's notice, in The Fairy's Dilemma, at the Prince's Theatre, Manchester, with great success, is the grand-daughter of the late Charles Wood, whose productions at the Rotunda Theatre, Liverpool, will always be remembered by lovers of the drama. Miss Redfern is a clever young lady. She sings, acts, and dances equally well, and is engaged by Mr J. E. Vedrenne for the forthcoming Christmas production at the Court.

At the Enfield Police-court, on Monday, George Foster, of Sutherland-terrace, Ponders End, was fined £10 for receiving bets at Ponders End on the 11th and 12th inst., and Wm. George Tuggey was fined £15 for five offences of a similar kind in the same district. Mr Woodcock, who defended, put in a letter, which he stated was written by Mr W. S. Gilbert, of the Edgware Bench of magistrates. Mr Gilbert said that the police should not allow such charges to accumulate, but should deal with them in the first instance.

The late Mr Walter Sealby was buried at Paddington Cemetery on Tuesday. Wreaths were sent by the widow and daughter, the family, Mr and Mrs John Sealby, Mr Herbert Sealby, Mr and Mrs Gibson, Mr and Mrs Ralland, Mr Levilly, Mr and Mrs Fred Little, Mr Bob Watt, Mr Peter Lawton, Mr and Mrs Kebby, and Mr Martin Adeson.

Visitors to the old parish church at Richmond must have noticed the dilapidated state of the marble memorial tablet to Edmund Kean, erected in 1839 by his son Charles. When the tablet was cleaned in 1898 a plaster cast was made of the profile head of Edmund Kean in the centre of the tablet, and this cast now hangs on the wall of the Richmond Free Library. A comparison between it and the original portrait, as it now is, shows how greatly the latter has deteriorated in the course of a few years owing to its exposure to the weather. Mrs Paget, a niece of Mrs Charles Kean, and once well-known as Miss Patty Chapman, petitioned the Consistory Court of the Diocese of Rochester to grant a faculty to allow the removal of the tablet from the outside wall and its re-erection inside the church on the west wall, as near as possible to its present position. The vicar and churchwardens gave their consent, and it has been decided to place the tablet on the right of the west entrance over the verger's seat. It is expected that the memorial will be in its new position by Monday, when the new chancel is to be opened by the Bishop of Rochester. The tablet had to be carefully cleaned, and this has been done under the direction of the well-known sculptor, Mr Thomas Brock, R.A.

At North London Police-court, on Monday, Mr C. V. Young asked Mr Fordham to license a little girl to play for the week at the Dalston Theatre in A Path of Thorns. So far, he said, as the appearance of the child went, she had evidently found her life a path of roses. She had acted in this play continuously since August last, and dressed in the same room as her mother who was also a member of the company. She had a doctor's certificate of fitness, and her education was well looked after by her mother, and also by the agent-in-advance, who was a B. A. of St. John's College, Cambridge. She had passed the sixth standard when she left the Board school. Mr Fordham—How long is she in the theatre? Mr Young—She appears in four scenes—the first at 8·15; and she has finished by 10·45. She is twelve-and-a-half-years old, and thoroughly enjoys her parts, which include a cake-walk and a song. Mr Fordham—She is twelve-and-a-half years? Mr Young—And you will remember that Ellen Terry started younger than this. Mr Fordham—In other days. This is a profession which I very much admire, but it is a very difficult one. Mr Young—I think you will say that this child may safely continue her profession. Mr Fordham—Yes; I will grant the certificate.

Since the adoption of the Immigration Restriction Act by the Australian Commonwealth, the theatrical managers and amusement promoters of the Antipodes are forced to take out exemption certificates before coloured performers are allowed to land. During the past few months Major Taylor, the American champion cyclist; Merzouk, an Algerian wrestler; Abomah, the American giantess; and the Fisk Jubilee Singers were permitted to land in Australia only after exemption certificates for periods extending from six to twelve months had been signed by the interested parties.

The excellent likeness of the late Mr John Hollingshead, which we reproduced in the last issue of The Era, was photographed by Mr Henry T. Reed, of 443, West Strand. By an error the admirable portrait was ascribed to another photographer.

AMUSEMENTS IN AUSTRALIA.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

SYDNEY, Sept. 6.—Criterion.—On Saturday Mr W. F. Hawtrey produced Tatterley, and anyone who knows the conscientious work of the actor-manager can be certain that the part of the old miser, Caleb Fry, was capably acted. Attention to detail and absolute consistency are Mr Hawtrey's own characteristics, and Tom Gallon's masterpiece stepped out of the book to talk to the Criterion playgoers. The old servitor, whose stay in the play is all too short, was capitally reproduced by Mr Olly Deering, an ideal Tatterley. The selfish brutal cad, Hector Kingdon, was in Mr Gregor M'Mahon's hands, and received all the necessary attention. The drunken scene was admirably acted. The young artist Donald Brett found a congenial interpreter in Mr O. P. Heggie, and Mr G. W. Elton was the henpecked Hepworth-Mellows, a careful characterisation; the domineering wife being in the artistic keeping of Miss Emma Bronton. As the good-hearted landlady, Mrs Giffey, Miss Mary Bancroft did good work, and Miss Winifred Austin made Ella Parrant very winsome. Under Mr Hawtrey's own supervision the performance was a particularly smooth one.

Tivoli.—On Saturday a sensation was created by the appearance of the Peschkoff Company, four handsome Russian females and one male Their dancing and tambourine playing whilst depicting the national Terpsichorean vagaries were very fine, and the turn was an eminently successful one. Frank Harwood has won Tivolian favour, and Nat Clifford was heartily welcomed back. Nellie Kilburn, Ward Lear, Irving Sayles, Diamond Duo, Maud Faning, Ella Wellington, Maggie Fraser, Tom Leonard, Ernest Sullivan, and Little Olive Carr are all in the bill.

MELBOURNE, Sept. 21.—What promises to be a boom in Gilbert and Sullivan Opera has commenced in this city. Four weeks ago Mr J. C. Williamson's Royal Comic Opera Company returned to Her Majesty's Theatre, after a successful tour through New Zealand and brief but profitable seasons in Sydney and Brisbane. Tapu was selected for the opening piece, but the new Maori opera only ran for ten nights and The Mikado was staged for two nights to fill in the time prior to a revival of My Lady Molly. The latter opera also failed to draw good houses, but the two Mikado nights attracted crowded audiences. In the meantime letters addressed to the local press by enthusiastic playgoers urged the management to give them more Gilbert and Sullivan. Mr Williamson responded with three more nights of The Mikado, followed last Saturday by a well-staged production of Patience. It is seventeen years since Gilbert's satire on the æsthetic movement was last produced in Melbourne, and Saturday's crowded audience doubtless comprised a large section of a generation to whom the wit, humour, and dainty music of the opera came as a delightful surprise while older playgoers were able to revive many pleasing memories. The leading feature of what has turned out to be an exceptionally successful revival was centred in the reappearance of Mr Howard Vernon. This actor, than whom there has never been a better exponent of Gilbertian humour in Australia, was the original Bunthorne when Patience was first produced in Melbourne twenty-two years ago. For some years past Mr Vernon with one or two brief exceptions, has been absent from Melbourne, and his entrance on Saturday night was the signal for an ovation that was creditable to those who came prepared to show that they had not forgotten an actor who must now be classed as one of the veterans of the Australian stage. What was even more pleasing, Mr Vernon rose to the occasion, and Bunthorne was never played better, in spite of the grey hair that was hidden by the raven locks of the actor's wig. The other parts were also well placed. Miss Florence Young did full justice to the music of the leading soprano part, Patience, while Miss Celia Ghiloni is to be congratulated upon her exceptionally good representation of Lady Jane. Miss Maud Chetwynd as Angela, Miss Evelyn Scott as Saphir, and Miss Sara Hyman as Ella formed a pleasing trio, and Mr Reg. Roberts acted and sang well in the comparatively light part of the Duke. Mr Haigh Jackson seemed unequal to the difficulties of Gilbertian patter, but otherwise made a satisfactory Calverly, and Mr Arthur Hunter, who made his first entrance as the Major of the Dragoons, was called upon at a moment's notice to take the part of Grosvenor. Mr John Ralston, who has only recently joined the company, was cast for Grosvenor, but met with an accident on his way to the theatre, and the part had to be read by Mr Hunter. In spite of this unfortunate episode the stage-manager, Mr Henry Bracey, is to be congratulated upon one of the most successful comic opera revivals ever produced in Melbourne. The part of Grosvenor is now being played by Mr Ralston, and thus further strength has been added to the production. Patience is followed by Charity Begins at Home. The cast comprises Messrs George Lauri (Jo), Reg. Roberts (Gorringe), Claude Bantock (Bumpus), and Misses Ghiloni (Susan) and Chetwynd (Mrs Bumpus).

At the Princess's Mr George Stephenson's American comedy company is playing in a rapidly changing series of musical burlesque productions. Mr J. C. Stine and Miss Olive Evans have thoroughly established themselves as popular favourites. Mr C. P. Bates and Mr William Douglas also contribute plenty of fun, though some of their Americanisms are lost on an Australian audiance. Mr Ralph and Miss Reba Bicknell are dancers of great ability, who enliven the plays in which quietness cannot be noted as a prominent feature, while Miss Kate Douglass and Miss Marjorie Ford render good service in light comedy parts. Last week Other People's Money gave way to Brown's in Town.

Mr George Musgrove's dramatic company arrived in this city from London this week. The company will open at the Princess's with Pretty Peggy, Miss Nellie Stewart and Mr Harcourt Beatty appearing in the leading parts. Other members of the company are Mrs Maesmore Morris, Misses Nannie Bennett, Singleton, Willard and Davenport, and Messrs Malcolm Dunn, Dudley Clinton, Harry Parker, and Lindsay (stage manager).

Mr William Anderson's dramatic company has moved from the Royal (now being rebuilt) to the Bijou, where The Worst Woman in London is staged.

The Opera House, under the management of Mr Harry Rickards, continues to give a varied programme of many attractions. The bill for the present week shows the names of Mr Harry Atkinson, the Salambos, the Levinos, Will Van Allen, Historicus, Fred Bluett, the Steele Sisters, Blutch Jones, Ruby Clifford, Ida Rosslyn, John Kearns, Pearl Lovell, George Dean, and the Driscolls.

A report from Western Australia states that the dramatic company headed by Miss Maud Jefferies and Mr Julius Knight opened in Kalgoorlie, a leading mining town, to a house in which £1,000 worth of seats was booked.

AMUSEMENTS IN INDIA.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

BOMBAY, OCT. 7.—THE Royal Coronation Circus has opened on the Maidan here, commencing Monday last, and inaugurating our cold season amusement programme. Amongst the leading turns are Blanche and Diacoff, the teacup track riders, whose performance is most sensational. Mokana, the handcuff monarch and jail breaker, is the first notable artiste who has appeared in this style of entertainment in India. The equestrian acts of Mdlle. Felding and Mr Johnstone are a distinct change from the old circus shows; the Musical Ashbys, a well-known music hall turn, and the Sisters Burgess, a couple of pleasing singers and coon dancers, also contribute. Both the Flying Meteors, who are on a second visit to the far East and have already made their name out here, and Mdlle. Elivo on the single trapeze, are just the sort of turns to achieve success here. The clowns, headed by the Burra Sahib, Mr J. Jenkins, the proprietor, cause hearty laughter. Willie Jenkins, a clever youngster about six, does a smart turn with his Shetland ponies.

AT North London Police-court, on Tuesday, an application was made to Mr Dickinson for a licence to enable a boy to take part in an acrobatic performance at the Hackney Empire. Mr Dickinson—Have the police had notice? Sub-Divisional Inspector Lee—Yes; they have had a kind of notice; but it is so vague that there was nothing for us to act upon. The manager of the music hall does all he can to assist the police; but these acrobats, who are usually foreigners, and only arrive in London a few hours before the performance, do not always give the police the information they require. Mr Dickinson—I shall refuse the certificate. The police must be supported in insisting upon proper information being given with regard to these child acrobats.

KEAN AND CLARGES-STREET.

Anything which tends to increase the dignity of the theatrical profession, and to do honour to those of its members who have achieved fame in the past, is interesting to every actor in the present; and the action of the London County Council in attaching a memorial tablet to the wall of No. 12 Clarges-street, Piccadilly, where EDMUND KEAN lived from 1815 to 1824, is highly to be commended.

The circumstances under which KEAN took the house are agreeable to recall. In 1815 the actor was at the height of his success. The days of starving and strolling were over; and on Jan. 26, 1814, he had "come, seen, and conquered" in the character of Shylock at Drury-lane. KEAN'S career in itself was a romance. The life of a strolling player in the early part of the nineteenth century was one, not only of anxiety and humiliation, but of actual want. One of KEAN'S most vivid remembrances was of playing King Lear at Waterford, when the pangs of hunger which he was suffering gave to his eye a wildness that was certainly "realistic." He was then expected to be ballet-master to the company, and also to perform the part of harlequin; for KEAN was the best harlequin in the United Kingdom, and, besides, excelled as a tight-rope dancer, a pugilist, a fencer, and a representative of the monkey tribe after the manner of the late CHARLES LAURI. On one occasion, at his benefit at Waterford, he gave samples of all his accomplishments, and realised forty pounds.

The sudden change in KEAN'S fortunes was sufficient to turn the head of any man. After his first London benefit, Drury-lane was crowded to suffocation BYRON and TOM MOORE were in a box, and KEAN benefited to the extent of eleven hundred and fifty pounds. The scene at his lodgings, as described by an eye-witness, was extraordinary. Money was lying about in all directions; his little son CHARLES was playing with a score of guineas on the floor; banknotes were in heaps on the mantlepiece, table, and sofa; and poor Mrs KEAN was—as well she might be—entirely bewildered. KEAN was regarded as a divinity, and even his wife was treated with a kind of reflected reverence. His portrait was done by a fashionable painter; prints of him were exhibited in shop windows; poems lauding him appeared in the papers; and, as HAZLITT says, if you hinted at KEAN being hoarse in the last act of Richard III. you were looked upon as a luke-warm devotee, or as half an infidel. To obtain a new play for him to appear in at Drury-lane, Lord BYRON, who was one of the Sub-Committee of Management of the theatre, put himself to a great deal of trouble, and has left a humorous account of his sufferings. "The scenes I had to go through," writes the poet in a letter to MOORE; "the authors and the authoresses, the milliners, and the wild Irishmen who came in upon me, to all of whom it was proper to give a civil answer, and a hearing, and a reading. Miss GLOVER'S father, an Irish dancing master of sixty years, called upon me to offer to play Archer, in The Beaux' Stratagem, dressed in silk stockings on a frosty morning to show his legs. Then came Mr. O. HIGGINS, then resident at Richmond, with an Irish tragedy, in which the unities could not fail to be observed, for the hero was chained by the leg to a pillar during the chief part of the performance." When KEAN appeared in Dublin and was slandered by a rascally box-keeper at the theatre there the undergraduates of Trinity College waited on him to know if he would wish the theatre to be pulled down!

It was in the autumn of the same year that, returning to London, the actor took Lady RYCROFT'S furnished house at 12, Clarges-street, Piccadilly, where the memorial tablet has just been put up. People of title, fashion, and distinction assembled to admire his powers as a conversationalist, a raconteur, and a mimic. But KEAN would often slip away after his brilliant receptions were ended to a public-house in Fountain-court called the Coal Hole, where met a club named the "Wolves," composed of actors and those connected with theatres. While living in Clarges-street he set up a carriage and bought several valuable horses, and he used to ride along the country roads at night, returning home only at daybreak. Someone in society presented him with a puma, which he used to take out in a boat on the Thames. He passed along the streets in a carriage drawn by four bay horses, wrapped in a large Spanish cloak which Sir GEORGE BEAUMONT had brought him from Seville. He was a patron of the prize ring then a plaything of the nobility. He gave excellent dinners and delightful evening parties; and amongst his guests were many persons of rank. He himself was sought by many "lion-hunting" ladies in society; but he kept aloof. It was characteristic of the man that the only person of title for whom he had an affection was Lord BYRON, who tried hard to induce KEAN to frequent his—the poet's—own circle. But KEAN felt himself out of place amidst fashionable surroundings, and would often remain gloomy and silent at such gatherings, though he could be most entertaining and amusing when he chose.

Rightly regarded, KEAN'S career is a tragedy in itself—the inevitable débacle of the individual not strong enough for his circumstances. He was naturally "sober, temperate, and chaste." He was a loving husband, and a moderate drinker. He was ruined by his extraordinary elevation into society. Society killed KEAN. He was easily affected by wine, and two or three glasses would "upset" him. Yet the stage door of Drury-lane Theatre was beset by "smart" people, who waited in their carriages at the stage door to tempt him to some late supper-party. KEAN tried hard to resist these temptations, and his friend WOOD often remained with him in his dressing-room several hours after the performance to tire out these persevering "friends." At this distance of time, the impression that remains of the sordid intrigue which caused the British public to dethrone their favourite is that KEAN was a sensualist who betrayed the honour of a hospitable friend. But Alderman COX was a complacent husband of the most inexcusable sort; and, as for Mrs COX, there is little doubt from which side the overtures to immoral connection came. She obtained an introduction to KEAN by a sham fainting fit while he was playing Othello at Taunton; and that KEAN endeavoured to keep her at arm's length was proved by the evidence of his dresser, who swore that the actor had tried to stop her from coming behind the scenes. When we remember that up to this point in his life there had been no blot on KEAN'S reputation as a faithful spouse; and when we also take into consideration the fact that Mrs COX'S lovers were numerous, that she several times applied to KEAN for money, that the Alderman's affairs were in a desperate condition, that he obtained eight hundred pounds damages, that he did not ask for a divorce from his wife, and that after the trial he took lodgings for her in Norfolk-street, where she cohabited with one of his clerks, men of the world must rather pity KEAN as the dupe of the precious couple. He had remained sober, temperate, and faithful amidst the poverty of country "circuits" and the hardships of the stroller's hard career. He was plunged by his success into a society in which "three-bottle" men were venerated, and adultery was regarded indulgently unless it was made public. He succumbed, in short, to Society, which he had endeavoured to avoid, and which was in a measure forced upon him by his position. It is pleasant to know that things have been altered since KEAN lived in Clarges-street; and that the temptations of an actor's career have been removed by the elevation of his status, the lessening of his hardships, and the vast improvement which has been made in the morals of society.

MR GEORGE GROSSMITH gave his well-known monologue entertainment to a crowded audience in the theatre of the Birkbeck Institute on Wednesday evening, and, from a casual observation he made, it would appear that our genial satirist and ex-Savoy comedian is contemplating retirement. He said that "in twelve months or thereabouts, he would be retiring from the service of the public." This remark, if accurately heard and interpreted, will be unwelcome news to many institutes and social organisations all over the country, for whose members and friends Mr Grossmith has provided so much innocent enjoyment since he left the Savoy.

MR WALTER BEAUMONT, who was the original Lord Loam, in The Admirable Crichton, on tour, has had to decline an offer to support Miss Marie Tempest in the new play at the Criterion, owing to previous arrangements with Mr W. S. Penley.

REOPENING OF THEATRE ROYAL, NORWICH.

After an absence of fourteen months the legitimate drama at Norwich returns to its old place, where in years gone by giants of the profession held regal sway, and enthralled their audiences with admiration and wonder. Actors living, actors dead, loved and revered the old theatre, and many received in it their early lessons in the dramatic art long before they had taken a foremost place in the ranks of fame. To old Norwich playgoers it seemed a pity that it should have been thought necessary to desert a spot so hallowed with the best traditions and seek a fresh one. In the past the "Norwich company of comedians" numbered some of the best artists. But we need not dwell on the past, but welcome the new era of dramatic usefulness opened up at the old house. On Saturday Mr Fred Morgan, the manager, modestly asked the justices at the Guildhall Petty Sessions for his original licence, and, as the Chief Constable expressed himself as satisfied with the exit arrangements, it was granted.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr F. O. Taylor, I.P.C.C.), addressing Mr Morgan, said:—The magistrates unanimously grant the application, and we hope you will have as much success in the old house in the future as you had in the past. You are returning to your old love, and we trust the public will support you thoroughly. Some of us regret that the Opera House in St. Giles is to be given over to a different class of entertainment than that for which it was originally intended, but that matter rests with the public and not with us. We hope, however, the legitimate drama will continue to meet with success in Norwich, and that that success may be greater even than that of past days. As a lover of the drama, and of the dramatic art myself, I am very glad to think the care of it in Norwich is to remain in the same hands as it has done for so many years. The Bench generally wish you every success.

Mr MORGAN—Thank you, gentlemen.

On Monday there was a crowded house to celebrate the reopening, and many well-known local playgoers were numbered among the audience. Miss Ida Molesworth and Mr Mark Blow's excellent company admirably presented Under Two Flags, and approbation was enthusiastically expressed. Mr Mark Blow as Bertie Cecil Royellieu, afterwards known as Louis Victor, exhibited much ability. Mr Reginald Harley West was very good as Barklie Cecil Royellieu; Mr Charles Brooke ably accounted for the part of Lord Royellieu; and Mr Geo. Norman-Burt cleverly represented Lord Rockingham. Mr Will Hook rendered valuable assistance as Rake; Mr Chas. C. Pitt was successful as Col. Chateauroy; and Mr Sydney Richards deserves compliments as Capt. Claude De Chamellon. Miss Laura Walker was exquisite as Cigarette, and became a warm favourite; Miss Celia Gordon was dignified as Princess Venetia Corona; and Miss Bertha Kingston was good as Lady Beatrice Guinevere. The other characters were in able hands. The scenic effects were very pretty, and the lightning and sandstorm were most realistic. Mr Morgan has made every part of the house very comfortable, and all his friends, with ourselves, wish him success.

FORBES ROBERTSON ENTERTAINED.

The Corinthian Club entertained Mr and Mrs Forbes Robertson at luncheon in the Dolphin Hotel, Dublin, on Wednesday, Sir CHARLES CAMERON, C.B., President, in the chair. The company exceeded eighty in number. After the toast of "The King," which was duly honoured, Mr W. A. CRAIG, J.P., read his ode, composed for the occasion. Sir CHARLES CAMERON proposed the health of Mr and Mrs Forbes Robertson.

Mr FORBES ROBERTSON, in responding, referred to the honour which he enjoyed five years ago in being entertained by the club. He thanked the club now for the further honour of receiving himself and his wife. Since his last visit to Dublin his family had made an alliance with America, where he had chosen his wife; and it was not unimportant to point out that she was of Irish blood. Her father was an Irishman. The Club would not expect him to discuss the drama, its merits, and demerits. There had been, however, a good deal of talk of the decadence of the drama; but that pessimistic view had been held from time immemorial. He did not share in it. His good fortune in his many visits to Dublin had been to enjoy full houses, while he had received many acts of kindness from individuals, as well as from the public in general. He was glad to see the movement created by the Irish Dramatic Society. It was ambitious, but tentative. In the intellectual spirit which it engendered there was hope for the drama. The serious drama was in some cities considered a bore. But Dublin was always enthusiastic in supporting the higher works of the drama. He therefore thought that the formation of the Irish Dramatic Society was a good augury for the drama.

Mr JUSTICE ROSE, who was received with applause, proposed the toast of "The Other Guests," and called on Miss GRIFFIO, a distinguished member of Mr Forbes Robertson's company, to respond for the gentlemen, and on Mr SHANNON, President of the University Philosophical Society, to respond for the ladies.

Miss GRIFFIN, who was received with plaudits, delivered a humorous speech. Mr SHANNON also responded. Miss Lee gave a charming recitation. Several of the members of the club contributed vocally and instrumentally to the entertainment.

THE burlesquing of public men on the stage recently formed the subject of an interesting controversy in Australia. When Mr J. C. Williamson first produced Tapu, the Maori opera, in Sydney, Mr George Lauri was billed as "Mr George Wright, an Australian M.P.," and his make-up furnished an exact representation of Mr G. H. Reid, the then leader of the Opposition in the Commonwealth Parliament. A few weeks later, and just prior to the first presentation of the opera in Melbourne, Mr Reid took office as Prime Minister, and as a matter of good taste Mr Williamson decided to alter the name of the character to "Mr Edward Wright, an English M.P.," and requested Mr Lauri to tone down his make-up, so that the resemblance to Australia's most conspicuous politician should not be too obvious. The "book" was severely cut, at least as regards Mr Lauri's part, and a feature that had provoked uproarious laughter in Sydney was practically eliminated from the Melbourne production.

THE DRAMA IN ROTTERDAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

ROTTERDAM, OCT. 26.—Since the opening of the fall and winter season, Manager Van Eysden has put on a couple of new plays, and revived a former successful production, to wit, Tolstoi's Resurrection. The most efficient company of the Grand Theatre has been seen to marked advantage in the three plays under consideration, the first in order being Bernard Shaw's satirical comedy, Arms and the Man, under the Dutch title of Oorlogsmannen (Warriors). The satire, as the play indeed may be termed, was capitally cast and interpreted, and very well mounted; but it failed to please the public in general. The cast was capital, Mr Tartaud achieving an unequivocal success for his easy and debonnair impersonation of Bruntschil, the matter-of-fact hero, whilst words of praise are due to Mesdames Tartaud, Van Kerckhoven, and Van Kuyk, and Messrs Smith and Faassen for their careful and painstaking acting. The second production was the farcical comedy from the German of Schefnaren En groote nul (A Great Nullity), in which Mrs Van Eysden and Mr Morriën deserve special mention for their bright and animated by-play and action. En groote nul is a typical comedy-farce of the modern German stage, and, as a dramatic work, it is well worthy of the name it bears, but it contains funny incidents and amusing scenes, so that it catches the public favour. The popularity of Tolstoi's Resurrection was made quite evident last night on seeing the crowded house that greeted the revival. The audience followed the five acts in breathless interest, the curtain being rung up again and again at the end of each and every act. The part of Katucha-Maslowa is one of Mrs Tartaud's most artistic renditions, and I doubt if a better delineation of the character in all its details is to be seen on any stage. The prison scene alone, as interpreted by Mrs Tartaud, is a drama in itself, the pathos, byplay, and power being complete and full of artistic touches.

THE well-known French actor De May, who is now on tour with a company formed from the ranks of the members of the leading Parisian theatres, such as the Odéon, Gymnase, Vaudeville, &c., has been seen here on one of the "off nights" of the Grand Theatre, the programme chosen being Shakespeare's Hamlet, or rather, the French adaptation of the immortal Bard's work. The adaptation is from the pen of Alexandre Dumas and Meurice, and is but poorly done, the tragedy being "cut," and most terribly, too, to boot. De May is a clever actor, and it is a pity he did not appear in a rôle more congenial to his style of acting, it being much too melodramatic and spasmodic for the Melancholy Dane. Indeed, these words are applicable to the entire performance, which was more like that of a French melodrama at the Porte St. Martin than of Shakespeare's great tragedy.

ON two other off-nights at the Grand Theatre the stage has been occupied by the company of the Berliner Theater. As is well known, this company, which is one of the best dramatic organisations of Berlin, and which may, indeed, be considered as one of the most excellent and thoroughly well-balanced companies now going, has now started on a tour, Rotterdam having just been favoured with a visit. The first performance given by the Berliner Theater company was Zapfenstreich (Tattoo), Beyerlein's military drama, one of the company's successes in Berlin. The drama, with its thrilling scenes, was a perfect reproduction of German military life, the parts fitting the different members of the company like gloves, so that the soldierly spirit and element pervading the entire performance was in truth, unique. A general meed of unstinted praise should be dealt out in speaking of the cast, Messrs Pittschau, Weigert, Kuhnert, and Wehrlin coming in for the lion's share of the eulogy and applause, whilst Ida Roland as Klärchen gave a singularly touching and life-like interpretation of the role. The second programme of the Berliners was Alt Heidelberg, made so familiar to Londoners by the English version at the St. James's. Forster's play was acted with a smoothness and completeness in all the minor details and accessories, whilst each and every part was ably and thoroughly interpreted, so that the performance was a succession of delightful and finished pictures. A bumper to August Weigert for his Karel Heinrich, and to Felicitia Cerigioli as Käthie, and indeed to all the Berliners. The theatre was crowded and the audience most enthusiastic.

THE special court held at Liverpool on Tuesday for the granting of theatrical and music licences under the new regulations recently prepared by the justices did not cause any particular flutter. This is to be accounted for by the fact that the theatres in the city on the Mersey are in a capital condition of completeness, especially in regard to exits. The authorities have for many years laid down stringent rules and regulations which have caused a complete change to come over matters. An attempt was made on Tuesday to raise a discussion regarding standing room, and the Bench somewhat foolishly suggested that the number of persons allowed to remain in the theatre without seats should be limited, but the view of the head constable on the question was accepted. This was that the onus of keeping a free passage for two persons to pass should be upon the licensee. The Bench accepted this sensible suggestion. A little reference was made to additional cloakroom accommodation for gentlemen at the Shakespeare Theatre, and the provision of female lavatories for the pit and pit stalls at the Royal Court. Mr Robert Arthur the licensee, pointed out that such were in his scheme, but they had not been able to complete everything. The city surveyor suggested a new entrance at the back of the gallery, but Mr Arthur, who ought to know, emphatically pointed out that such would, in case of panic, prove a death-trap, and people would fall over the proposed balcony. The licence was granted on the understanding that a room over the auditorium was not to be used for the storage of properties.

THE Royal Court Theatre proprietor has for years been put to great expense in making almost unnecessary alterations suggested by the Bench and their advisers, and the general opinion is that the building is the most complete of its character in the city, and cannot be improved. These annual pettifogging growls are very irritating. As bearing upon this point the authorities themselves showed that they did not know their own minds. In regard to the Queen's Theatre, the new and splendid edifice that has recently been erected, the Bench objected to the form of bolts on the doors, and demanded that they should be taken off. The poor harassed licensee pointed out that the panic bolt now required had been on primarily, but that the Health Committee had ordered him to remove it, or would not have granted him any certificate. What was he to do between the two bodies? And the Bench, amid the laughter of the court, ordered the panic bolts to be put back. This is a specimen of the game that is played by the paid servants of the Corporation against each other, the poor ratepayer having to pay the piper. In the case of the Philharmonic Hall and the Sun Hall, Kensington, the panic bolts condemned by the Health Committee were also ordered to be put back. Reference was made to the conflict between the two bodies at the City Council on Wednesday, when theatre proprietors were described as being "between the devil and the deep sea."

"A GIRL'S CROSS ROADS" will form the dramatic attraction at the Grand Theatre, Islington, next week. For his early door patrons, Mr Geo. Davey will present Mr Fred Millis, the prominent Australian ventriloquist, in an entirely new sketch, entitled Dear Homeland.

MUSIC HALL GOSSIP.

MR DAN LENO, who had been showing signs of mental breakdown during the last week of his engagement at the London Pavilion, is at the present moment resting at home under the watchful care of a well-known specialist. He made his last appearance at the popular Piccadilly-circus establishment on Thursday evening, the 20th inst. He is being most tenderly nursed, but it is at the moment very doubtful if he will be able to make his appearance in Drury-lane pantomime, to which he had been eagerly looking forward.

AS a successor to the lamented Mr Herbert Campbell Mr Arthur Collins has secured the services of Mr Johnny Danvers, one of the very best of the many droll comedians who made their names with the Mohawk Minstrels. Like the old favourite whom he is to succeed, he is tall and robust, so that in stature, as well as in humour, the new comedian will uphold the Drury-lane traditions in the production of The White Cat.

THE Charles Morton matinée at the Palace Theatre being fixed for the afternoon of Tuesday, Nov. 8, makes it clash with Mr Tree's matinée in aid of the Actors' Benevolent Fund at His Majesty's. It promises to be of exceptional interest. The preliminary list of artists who have already kindly promised to give their services include Mr Rutland Barrington, Miss Esmé Beringer, Mr Arthur Bourchier, Mr Seymour Hicks, Miss Evelyn Millard, Mr Arthur Prince, Miss Ada Reeve, Mrs Beerbohm Tree, Miss Violet Vanbrugh, Mr Lewis Waller, Madame Genée from the Empire, an excerpt from the ballet Entente Cordiale from the Alhambra, and Mr Otto Vose. In addition to the whole body of London theatrical and variety managers, headed by Sir Henry Irving and Sir Charles Wyndham, a large number of distinguished persons are also allowing their names to be added to the honorary committee.

MR ARTHUR ROBERTS is undoubtedly at his best in a character part, in which he can find scope for his excellent gifts as a humourist, and it is therefore good news to the lovers of laughter that the "return of Arthur" to the Palace in about a fortnight's time is to synchronise with the production of a new sketch, specially written for him by Captain Basil Hood, whose name has been far too long absent from London programmes. It is entitled Brummagem Jem: A Traveller's Tale. We are glad to hear that Captain Hood has quite recovered from his illness, and that so distinguished and dainty a writer is devoting his talents to the halls.

"ETON," which at one time was announced to be the next production at the Empire, is to be shelved—at any rate for the present, as Mr Geo. Edwardes has decided to produce there shortly before Christmas a free adaptation, by Mr Wilhelm, of the scenario of the Viennese ballet Puppenfee. The piece, of which Herr Bayer, of Vienna, is the composer, has already enjoyed lengthy runs both in that city and in Paris. For the principal male part Signor Vincenti has been specially engaged, and Mdlle. Genée will appear in the delightful title-rôle.

MR B. W. FINDON, the well-known dramatic critic and author of the recently issued work on Sir Arthur Sullivan, has written an episode of humble life, entitled 'Melia, 'Enery, and It, which will be produced at the Tivoli this afternoon. Miss Maud Sinclair, a clever young actress, who appeared with great success as Fi-Fi during the last weeks of A Chinese Honeymoon at the Strand, is cast for the part of 'Melia: and young Mr H. E. Garden, a relative of Mr E. W. Garden, a very popular comedian, is cast for the part of 'Enery.

MR ALFRED BUTT seems to be speedily winning his spurs, and he has already exhibited no small aptitude for his responsible position. He has made arrangements to present the Eight Palace Girls on Monday week in a new act illustrating the amity existing between France and England. Mr Butt is having some original ideas carried out in respect of the dresses which will be worn by the Palace Girls, one half of whose corsages and short skirts will represent the British Royal Standard and the other half will depict the fleur de lys of France.

MISS CECILIA LOFTUS, who up to the present has had one of the most romantic and interesting careers of any modern actress, is to be married en secondes noces to Mr William Courtenay, an actor. It will be remembered that Miss Loftus, while appearing at the Palace Theatre, in 1894, eloped one day with Mr Justin Huntly McCarthy, the author of If I Were King and other successful pieces, who wrote long and elaborate criticisms of her acting as Haydée, in Don Juan, at the old Gaiety. The civil contract signed in Edinburgh was followed by the religious ceremony in London, the young couple being united in holy matrimony, according to the rites of the Roman Catholic Church, to which they both belonged. The disagreements and subsequent divorce preceded Miss Loftus's reappearance in London at the Lyceum with Sir Henry Irving's company, in his revival of Faust. Miss Loftus, who is, as our readers are well aware, the daughter of the popular Marie, made her first appearance on the boards as a mimic at the Oxford, in the early nineties, when she was barely seventeen years of age, and her talent created a considerable sensation. She has brilliantly sustained the promise of her early years.

MR LESLIE STUART, who is engaged on a new musical play, is about to add to his already long list of delightful numbers which find so much favour in England and America. His lyrics have an ideal interpreter in Mr Eugene Stratton. The latest melody from the pen of the accomplished composer of Florodora is entitled "My Little Black Pearl," and is a coon lilt of the most captivating kind. It is to be sung by Mr Stratton at the opening of the London Coliseum on Dec. 19, and it will be staged as a special scena, in order to bring out its dramatic story, in the development of which a chorus and a troupe of dancers will assist. Mr Stuart for a number of years has furnished the well-known coon actor with most of his successes, which have included "Little Dolly Daydream," "The Lily of Laguna," "Is yer mammy always wid ye?" and "I may be crazy, but I love you."

THE London Entertainments Protection Association, of which representative body Mr Henry Gros is the honoured president, will again promote the bill regulating the production of sketches at the halls in the next session of Parliament. The association, however, does not confine itself to political efforts, but does much useful and unobtrusive work in other ways. By its eloquent protest against several of the unworkable fads introduced as alterations in the rules of the L.C.C. governing places of entertainment on March 1 last, it has brought that body into a more equitable and more reasonable frame of mind. At a recent conference several important amendments were proposed and accepted. One of the most important of these amendments relates to the new seating arrangements, which are not to apply to existing buildings, except in cases of structural alteration. Another amended rule is the one relating to standing in gangways and overcrowding.

THE new ballet at the Empire will be ready about Christmas, and pending its production The Milliner Duchess will be revived on Monday, with Mdlle. Adeline Genée as the fascinating girl from the country, who becomes a modiste, and marries a marquis. High Jinks will be withdrawn after this evening.

MR ERNEST DOTTRIDGE, of the Empire, Oldham, has again refused, owing to pressure of business, to be a candidate for municipal honours.

EXCELLENT business is being recorded at the Palace Theatre, Lancaster, now being run by Messrs John Porter and W. J. Ferguson. Well selected bills, a smartly worked show, and the two-houses-a-night system are telling the tale.

THE foundation-stone of the New Hippodrome at Ipswich was laid by the Mayor of the town on Tuesday. The building is being erected for Messrs Bostock and Fitt, in St. Nicholas-street, Ipswich, and the ceremony was witnessed by a large number of persons, who, in addition to filling all available space on the site, thronged the street in the vicinity. The Ipswich Public Band was in attendance, and played several popular airs during the afternoon.

READERS may be reminded that it is little more than a month since the announcement was made that Messrs Bostock and Fitt, who run the Norwich Hippodrome on such successful and satisfactory lines, had acquired from the Corporation of Ipswich a site in St. Nicholas-street, on which they were about to erect an up-to-date Hippodrome. Excavating work was commenced on the site soon afterwards by Messrs Parkington and Son, to whom the work of building has been entrusted, and actual building operations were commenced about a fortnight ago. Mr Frank Matcham, of London, the noted theatrical architect for places of entertainment, has drawn the plans, and there is every assurance that the building which is to be erected will possess all the features of a first-class Hippodrome, and fully entitled to that name. It will seat 1 800 persons, and is expected to open on Boxing Day.

DR. WALFORD BODIE, who has been playing to record business in all the Scotch theatres, will take a rest next week, the only holiday he will have for the next two years, as he is fully booked ahead. He has refused for next week from Mr George Adney Payne the sum of £220 for that week in London for his own act alone, without his company. He will pay all his company half-salaries, so that his holiday at his beautiful Highland home in Macduff will cost him close on £50 a day. When he goes home he intends to give a treat to all his tenantry. The doctor is now one of the largest land and property owners in Macduff.

COLLINS'S HIPPODROME, Stoke-on-Trent, has since its opening with Marie Loftus had the enviable reputation of having a star at the head of the bill each week, and on Monday next the "Pottery folk" will welcome Eugene Stratton, to be succeeded in due course by Vesta Tilley, Vesta Victoria, Florrie Forde, Marie Lloyd, and "others too numerous to mention." Mr Frank Egerton, who is responsible for this lavish catering, is in town again this week on the alert to capture fresh novelties.

THE 378th meeting of the Executive Committee of the Music Hall Artistes' Railway Association was held on Tuesday afternoon, Mr W. J. P. Monkton, vice-president, presiding. The secretary reported that fifteen new members had joined during the past week, making a total number enrolled since the commencement of 10,651. A letter was read stating that six West-end specialists had kindly offered their medical services to members of the Association, and that they were all on the staff of large London hospitals. This fact might prove of great help to the poorer members of the Association, as it might secure them prompt admission and special personal attention. The next and last meeting of the present committee will be held on Tuesday at one o'clock.

"ALL the world's a stage" is often illustrated in the haunts of lawyers, and the worthy and upright Judge Addison, who spent much of his early life in Lancashire, commencing his career, it is said, on a Liverpool stage, seems to delight in giving advice to the profession. As counsel for the plaintiff in many a breach of promise case, his excellent voice and knowledge of Lancashire dialect often sent the court into roars.

THE Manchester Assize Courts, the scene of many of his triumphs, is not many yards from Broughton, and the following account of a case in the Southwark County Court shows that he could not allow any opportunity to slip of airing his knowledge of the Lancashire dialect. It appears that Mr Sam Hart, music hall agent, had secured engagements at the Victoria Theatre, Broughton, and at Middlesbrough for Otto Schuman, a circus artiste, and claimed commission. Mr Hart pronounced the Manchester suburb Browton. Judge Addison immediately disclaimed knowledge of such a place. He, however, knew a Brawton, and after requesting plaintiff to adopt that pronunciation, gave him the verdict for the amount claimed, with costs.

THE peerless De Dio, who finishes a most successful engagement at the Palace Theatre on Saturday night, opens on Tuesday, Nov. 1, for one month at the Central Theatre, Dresden. On Dec. 1 she opens at the Winter Garden, Berlin, and on New Year's Day at the Hansa Theatre, Hamburg. She sails from Southampton on Feb. 4 for South Africa, returning early in June to play the Stoll and Moss Tour. She has been re-engaged to appear at the Palace Theatre for two months—December, 1905, and January, 1906—in a series of new dances.

MISS LUCY CLARKE is scoring quite a phenomenal hit in America. Her most popular item is that pretty Jap song "Farewell, my little Yo San," which has quite taken the fancy of our cousins across the pond. Messrs Francis and Day have recently added this number to their "sixpenny pop" catalogue.

MORE than 2,400 suggestions were received from visitors to the Alhambra during the past week for a title for the new Urban Bioscope picture. From these "Whirling the Worlds" was selected as the best, and the prize of ten guineas has been paid to the winner, Mr Charles Mansfield, 3, West-view, Highgate-hill, N. The business at the Alhambra, under the able management of Mr George Scott, is going ahead by leaps and bounds.

A HANDSOME tigress named Julia, belonging to Mr Richard Sawade's troupe of performing animals, gave birth to three beautiful cubs at the Tivoli Theatre, Birmingham, early on Monday morning. Unfortunately, before the keepers became aware of the interesting event, Julia lay on one of the little ones, and crushed it to death. Either from excess of grief or a deplorable lack of parental affection, Julia could not be persuaded yesterday to suckle the remaining cubs, and looked on stolidly while her offspring were removed to a basket of straw, where a female dog was eventually induced to undertake the duties of foster-mother. The cubs are nearly as large as cats, and richly decorated with black and brown stripes.

A CAPITAL send-off was given to the celebrated band of the Coldstream Guards at the Waverley Market, Edinburgh, last Saturday evening, when they concluded an engagement at the annual Industrial Exhibition held here. Very carefully selected programmes of high-class music had been given, which delighted the public nightly. The talented conductor, Lieutenant J. Mackenzie Rogan, received quite an ovation at the finish, and in a felicitous speech congratulated the Edinburgh public, on behalf of himself and his band, on their very elevated musical taste.

THE music hall always reflects the vox populi. It did so in the days of Jingo Hunt, and it is doing so again this week. The unspeakable outrage committed by the Russian fleet on the British trawlers has raised a feeling of profound indignation in every English home, and it was only natural, therefore, that the popular feeling should find vent in verse. On Thursday evening, at the London Pavilion, Mr Leo Stormont recited a new poem by Mr J. E. M'Manus, author of "Wait a week or two" and other lyrics. Four lines of the last stanza indicate the spirit in which the writer has treated his subject:—

They may give us gold for innocent lives
And "apologies" for a "mistake;"
But that won't bring back the men to their wives—
And there's something else at stake.

The "something else" is "Who's going to rule the sea?" Mr Stormont's delivery of the poem was followed by the singing of "Rule, Britannia," and a deal of enthusiasm. Mr Henry A. Moore also recited on Thursday evening a poem, written specially by Arthur C. Armstrong, entitled "The Fisherman and the Russians."

AT the Alhambra Mr Alexander Higginson on Thursday sang a song from the pen of Mr Cecil Raleigh entitled "How Long?" The popular sentiment of the moment is expressed in the lines "There has been enough diplomacy; it's time to get the guns." The song makes no reference to what has been called somewhat facetiously "the Hull disaster." The audience was obviously sympathetic, but there was no great excitement. The serious situation arising from the untoward incident evidently put a restraining influence on the applause.

MR WEBSTER, who exhibits the figure known as "Zutka" at the Hippodrome, was the victim on Thursday of a very ugly practical joke. Someone put a bottle containing an anæsthetic in the box in which he brings on the mysterious figure, with the result that when Mr Webster opened the box in the arena he became unconscious. A doctor had to be called, and the item was left out of the afternoon performance. What the effect was on the figure—automaton or man, as it may be—has not been stated. Mr Webster offers £100 for the name of the perpetrator of the outrage.

MR HAMILTON HILL produced a new song during the week at the Chelsea Palace entitled "Beresford, we wish You had been There!" by Edgar Bateman and Henry E. Pether. It has been received with acclamation, dealing as it does with the question of the hour. Mr Tom Costello's stirring song, "The Fighting Ships of England," has also been freely enquired for at the music-sellers for the same reason, and the pantomime folks are securing Miss Kate Lawrence's "Why Shouldn't we Fight for our Own?" with its new verse, owing to the sudden demand for songs of this class.

MR WILLIE FREEAR has just returned after a three years' tour in Mexico, Honolulu, Fiji, Samoa, the Philippines, China, Japan, &c., with his three hours' single-handed vaudeville show, known as "Freear's Frivolities." He has been doing an extraordinary business, and has appeared before H.I.M. the Sultan of Turkey and numerous other potentates and princes, the Sultan of Turkey presenting him with the Gold Medal of Fine Arts. Mr Freear anticipates shortly supplying London with several Continental novelties for the halls.

MISS GERALDINE MONTROSE was playing on Monday evening at the Manchester Palace in a sketch entitled Snakes, when, in the scene where one of the ophidians is allowed to coil round the leading actress's neck, the reptile exerted its strength too much and almost strangled the lady. She screamed in agony, and the audience, taking it to be part of the play, applauded. The stage hands, however, seeing the true state of affairs, made a rush to drag off the python. The curtain was lowered amid some excitement, and the snake, by a great effort, was dragged away just in time to save Miss Montrose from serious consequences.

THE forty-second anniversary of Collins's is fixed for the night of Nov. 11, when Mr Charles Hector will put on a special programme and welcome an immense audience. When Sam Collins took over the hall after a brief reign at the old Marylebone, the hall on the green was known as the Lansdowne.

LAST week a long and interesting letter appeared in our columns on the subject of the child performer, signed jointly by Mr H. A. Lonsdell and Miss Dora Langlois, sketch artistes. It will be of interest to members of the music hall profession to know that Miss Langlois, who is part-author with Mr Lonsdell of the popular sketches in which they appear, is a rising young novelist with an increasing reputation. The autumn serial entitled "The Crimson Slipper," now running in an illustrated contemporary, is from her clever pen.

THE Coliseum Brighton (late the Empire), was opened on Monday amid considerable éclat. Among those present were the Mayor and Mayoress of the town, Alderman and Mrs E. Marx, and to the lady was presented a lovely basket of flowers. Mr Charles A. Wilkes, the managing-director, previous to the rising of the curtain, came to the footlights and bade the audience welcome. Miss Alexandra Dagmar then sang the National Anthem, and was the recipient of a bouquet. The entertainment was contributed by Miss Harriet Vernon, who repeated successfully her delightful song, "Only to be a Child Once More;" Miss Julie Mackey, who was persuaded to give her celebrated "Orange Peel" song as an encore; Mr Victor Stevens, a capital comedian; Miss Jessie Merrilees, burlesque artiste; Tom Brantford, mimic; Harry Phydora, comedian; Gladys Archbutt, and Florence Trevelion. Terry; or, True to His Trust, a popular sketch that has held the boards of the music-halls for fifteen years, was presented by a company under the direction of Mr Edward Cranston.

AHRENSMEYER has been astonishing Glaswegians this week by his remarkable feats of hypnotism and telepathy. On Monday he drove a carriage and pair blindfolded through the town over a route previously traversed by four representatives of the Glasgow Press. On Tuesday he submitted himself to an even more severe test by giving a private demonstration of his powers before some 200 local medical men, and came through the ordeal with flying colours, the doctors expressing themselves as much impressed and completely satisfied with the genuineness of the performance. As may be imagined, the publicity thus gained has resulted in crowded houses at the Hippodrome, where he has been appearing during the week.

MRS FRANK LEONARD, the widow of Mr Frank Leonard, who met with his death through an accident at Rochdale, writes from 202, Darwin-street, Birmingham, to acknowledge the following sums sent to her—the result of the appeal in the columns of our issue of the 22d:—Collected by Mr Joe Boggany, £4 10s. Collected by the De Courcy Brothers and Mr Arthur Boyne from the ladies and gentlemen at the Palace Theatre, Manchester, last week, 30s. Collected by W. H. Morgan, £12s.:—W. H. Morgan, 5s.; Jas. Byrne, 1s.; Two Friends, 2s; Dad, 1s.; Ass, 1s; Ruby Grey 1s.; Whisper, 1s.; Tom Shaw, 1s.; J. B. Wild, 1s.; Hugh Turner, 1s; Geo. H. Knowles, 2s.; Jack Lenton, 1s.; Bert Wilton, 1s.; Tom Moy, 1s.; Jimmy Green, 1s.; Ralph Henthorn, 1s.

MR JOHN LAWSON goes from triumph to triumph in his stage productions, the result mostly of a daring imagination and a spacious idea of stage-management. We look to him for sensation, and he has supplied it to us without stint in such productions as Humanity, The Shield of David, and Sally in Our Alley. He has found further great opportunities for weird effects and blood-curdling sensation in an extraordinary blend of the mystical and murderous, known under the name of Mr Todd, of London, which he produced on Monday evening at the Palace, Bristol. Indeed, the legend of Vanderdecken, the haunted mariner—"doomed to battle," as Mr Lawson puts it, "with the waves until my atonement is complete," is joined to the gruesome tale of Sweeney Todd, and forms, as our readers may imagine, a compound as exciting and as impressive as anything the fertile brain of the inventor has given us. On the story of the remorse-stricken voyager Wagner founded his charming opera of The Flying Dutchman, of which Senta is the heroine, whose self-sacrifice and love redeem Vanderdecken from his living torture.

IN Mr Lawson's sketch the legend is not much insisted on, and he conceives the idea of engrafting the soul of the Captain into the body of Sweeney Todd, the fictitious barber of Fleet-street. In tableau one of Mr Lawson's production we see the ship Star homeward bound. Among her passengers is Esther Oakley, who is on her way to London to meet her guardian, Colonel Sir Butcher Jeffries. Confined to her cabin by the orders of Vanderdecken, she finds a friend in a chivalrous young sailor named Mark. The poor girl is, however, throttled on board by Sir Butcher who, for reasons of his own, goes to meet her, and he gives out to the deceased girl's twin sister Joanna that she has committed suicide.

THE second tableau is the shop of Mr Todd, near Temple Bar, wherein the demon barber follows an unexampled career of crime that has many a time and oft proved the pivot of hair-raising dramas at the minor theatres. The murderous colonel pursues his villainous machinations, which are eventually foiled by the brave young sailor, who, we may well suppose, transfers the interest he felt in Esther Oakley to her living image, Joanna, the twin sister. The crypt of St. Dunstan is the third tableau, and and the story comes to a final conclusion with the death of Todd. The cast playing the piece at Bristol—and playing it exceedingly well—has included Mr E. S. Vincent as Colonel Sir Butcher Jeffreys, Mr Bailey Cohen as Mark, Miss Leah Barnata as Lady Butcher Jeffries, Miss Lillian Herries as the twin sisters, Esther and Joanna; Mr Boon St. Joseph as the Beadle of St. Dunstan's and Mr John Lawson as Vanderdecken and Mr Todd. We hope shortly to have an opportunity of seeing Mr Lawson's latest sensation in London.

MR JACK EDGAR announces for Nov. 17 his complimentary annual, which, by kind permission of Mr Henri Gros and the directors, takes place at the Metropolitan. The night is always a most interesting one, and the world of variety, as represented by proprietors, managers, syndicators, and directors, will crowd the fine palace in the Edgware-road on the occasion.

THE Palace, Hammersmith, will commence its anniversary celebration on Monday, Nov. 7. Every night during the week a special programme will be given, the stage-management being undertaken each evening by a different agent. The idea was initiated by Mr Fred Reeves during his engagement as manager at the hall, and it is being very wisely continued by Mr J. C. Coe, the popular proprietor.

AN application was made on Wednesday by Mr Richard Thornton to the Judge in Chambers for an injunction restraining Mr Sam Mayo from singing at the Palace, Blackpool, this week, on the ground that he had signed a contract to perform at South Shields. The application came before Mr Justice Jelf, and Mr Sam Mayo, through his solicitors, Messrs Amery-Parkes and Powell, pleaded that at the time the contract was signed he was an infant, and that it was not made for his benefit. He also defended the case on the ground that he was not bound to perform twice nightly at South Shields unless his salary was doubled, as when he signed the contract only one performance a-night was given at that hall. The judge refused to grant the application, and Mr Mayo is this week performing at Blackpool.

A SIMILAR application was made by Moss' Empires, Limited, to restrain Mr Sam Mayo from singing elsewhere other than at the Empires, Birmingham, Liverpool, Sheffield, Leeds, Bradford, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Edinburgh, Glasgow; or the Palace Theatre, Hull, under another contract; but this application was also dismissed on the same grounds. Mr William Whately, instructed by Messrs Amery-Parkes and Powell, appeared for Mr Sam Mayo in both actions, and Mr Bailhache, instructed by Messrs Smith, Rundell, and Dods, appeared for Mr Richard Thornton and Moss Empires, Limited.

MR HARRY BRUCE, after an absence of twelve years from the variety halls, during which time he has been touring Great Britain, Africa, and America with his own plays, has joined Ernest Ball to produce the sensational military spectacle, Woman and War. This will start at the Royal, for one week, commencing Nov. 7. A feature of the sketch will be a terrific sword fight between a woman and eight men. The swords used will be the full regulation cavalry pattern, and in consequence of the strain of fourteen performances in a week the services of two talented actresses, to play alternate nights, have been secured.

LAZARUS has just obtained the American patent for his new automatic tip-up seats. The fact of getting the American rights is a proof of the originality of the new seat idea. Our newest theatres and buildings are being seated with these up-to-date, luxurious tip-up chairs. The London Colosseum and the Manchester Hippodrome have studied the comfort of their patrons by providing the new seat, and if further proof were needed of their being the "right" seat they have received the approval of the London County Council.

CHIRGWIN has never learned to play billiards or cards. He believes in outdoor exercise, and is an enthusiastic angler. He is also a lover of motoring, and has a very fine 27 h.-p. Sidley motor, in which he has travelled nearly all over England. Before he went in for motoring he was "great" on horses, and secured a good few prizes at different shows.

ON Friday, Oct. 21, at one o'clock, at the Palace, Manchester (kindly lent for the purpose by Peter Watson, Esq.), a meeting of the members of the M.H.A.R.A. was held for the purpose of hearing an address from Mr Harry Mountford, chairman of this year's general meeting, on the work and the benefits secured by the retiring committee of the above body during the past year. It was largely attended, over 120 members being present. Mr Fred Harcourt occupied the chair, and was supported by Mr Walter Munroe. After listening to an able and exhaustive speech from Mr Mountford, to an eloquent attack from Mr Fred Herbert, and to speeches from Messrs Fred Southern, J. H. Milburn, and Fred Harcourt, the meeting, with one dissentient, passed the following resolution—"That, in the opinion of this meeting it is to the best interests of the M.H.A.R.A., that at the forthcoming election the retiring committee should be re-elected en bloc." Votes of thanks to Mr Watson for the use of the Palace, to Mr Harcourt as chairman, and to Mr Mountford were passed unanimously, and after a sitting of three hours the meeting terminated.

MR ALEC HURLEY'S coster delineation, and his pictures of coster life and manners, appeal more especially to the cockney mind; but such is the strength of his comedy, the charm of his voice, and the general buoyancy of the scenas he produces that he wins as great a success on tour as in this great London of ours. Alec is now leaving Ireland, but not without the assurance of his triumphs in Dublin and Belfast still pleasantly ringing in his ears. "Lambeth-walk" is not a thoroughfare that appeals to the Irish folk in the concrete sense; but the abstract sentiment of Mr Hurley's coster idyl of the same name has just the touch of nature that captures the warm hearts of our friends of the Emerald Isle.

MR TOM TINSLEY on Thursday evening was honoured by an immense audience, which crowded every corner of Gatti's (Road) on the occasion of his benefit. The most popular turn of the evening was himself, and his appearance on the stage was greeted with loud cheers. He was met there by a large crowd of friends and patrons of the hall. On their behalf, Mr Jimmy Clark, a well-known hatter of the neighbourhood, presented "Tom" with a cheque for £50. In doing so he spoke of the great pleasure it was to him to stand by an old pal, and the further pleasure he had in handing him a cheque representing "good old iron" to the tune of fifty of the best. Mr Tinsley, in acknowledging the gift, stated that as years went on it was a real surprise to him to find that his benefit grew, and that night stood as a record. He warmly thanked Mr Clarke and the many dear friends he saw standing round him for their extreme kindness, and also acknowledged his indebtedness to Mr Cattaneo, the artists, band, and staff.

BEFORE leaving the stage Mr Tinsley was induced to sing one verse of his popular song "When the old man came home sober." Among those present to offer their congratulations to the beneficiaire were Messrs Fred Miller, Teddy Giler, Sydney Hyman, Tom Shaw, Jack De Frece, Fred Reeves, Tom Pacey, Jesse Sparrow, Harry Poole, George Barclay, Ernest Edlesten, James Fortune, Edward Granville, E. Cory Woodrow, George Peel, T. W. Volney, Walter Norman, Angelo Asher, W. Burgess, Leon Bassett, Ernest Aplin, R. W. Bentley, Sheldon. Those surrounding Mr Tinsley on the stage during the presentation included the following terriers:—Harry Lester, H. Barnard, Bob Hutt, Cornish, and others.

THE programme included Miss Florrie Forde, who sang her popular song "Down at the old Bull and Bush;" Kittie Rayburn, in a bright and vivacious number; Mr George Mozart, in a monologue burlesque; Mr Arthur Prince, the cultured ventriloquist, and his "cabin boy;" Dorie Lyric, comedienne; Joe O'Gorman; and a number of others.

MR BARRASFORD, who has sub-leased the Britannia Theatre, Hoxton, finished up his occupancy of the house with a brilliant revival of The Shaughraun, the favourite Irish piece being skilfully condensed by Mr J. L. Shine in order to make it fit in with the two performances nightly plan. It was a remarkable achievement, reflecting the greatest credit on the stage-manager, the actor, the scenic artist, and the entrepreneur. There are men who erase the word "impossible" from their vocabulary. In twenty-four hours the piece was condensed, rehearsed, and put on. Assisting Mr Shine were Mr Story Gofton, Miss Alice Esden, Miss Ella Dixon, Orlando Daly, Marian Jay, and Isabel Cairns.

THE fine and commodious lounge of the Canterbury looks exceedingly attractive and cosy just now. A lovely new carpet of a warm, red tint covers the floor, and the comfortably upholstered and elegant-looking arm-chairs seem to invite one to sit in them and enjoy the creature comforts provided.

THERE will be a huge crowd there on the evening of Friday, Nov. 25, when will be celebrated the fifty-second anniversary of the Canterbury, with the early history of which the late Mr Charles Morton was so intimately connected. The history (between the years '52 and '63) of the "Academy over the Water," as the "over the bridge" establishment was christened by the late George Augustus Sala, was practically the history of the halls during that period, though we believe the story of the Royal Standard, Pimlico, goes back even farther than the Canterbury.

At a largely attended meeting held in Manchester last week the following resolution was carried unanimously:—"That a Music Hall Artistes' Protection Association should immediately be formed, and that certain gentlemen then present should be empowered to carry out the wishes of this meeting."

MR HARRY RANDALL'S newest song "There must have been a fire somewhere!" by Edgar Bateman and Sam Richards, is in the press, having been secured by the Charing-cross-road firm. The same house is also publishing as a free song "The boy that looks after his mother," by Geo. Lester and Fred Barnes. Messrs Verno and Voyce are making a big hit with this number.

THE Dunedin Troupe of famous cyclists are making a huge success at the Casino Theatre of Varieties, Buenos Ayres, South America. Miss Maudie and Queenie Dunedin are nightly presented with baskets of flowers for their graceful and clever performance on the stage and on the telephone wire, and Master Jimmie Dunedin, the well-known trick rider, has columns of notices in all the newspapers, praising his daring and marvellous cycling on one and two wheels. Harold Dunedin, the comic of the show, causes roars of laughter in the rôle of the Masher learning to ride. Mr Jas. E. Donegan, manager, teacher, and trainer of this talented troupe, has a book full of return dates. The Dunedins open in London in December.

The many professional friends of Mr Will Murray, the popular manager of Mr Frank Macnaghten's Palace Theatre, Blackburn, will be glad to learn that he has returned from his holiday in America safe and sound and in the pink of condition. From first to last he had a very good time, and was royally received by the numerous managers with whom he came in contact, especially those of New York, and by the representatives of the various great publishing houses. Immediately on his return to England he received a telegram from his proprietor, Mr Macnaghten, summoning him to London. When he reached town he was at once offered a benefit at the Palace, Blackburn, as a testimony to the ability with which he had performed his duties as manager. The benefit will take place shortly, and promises to be most successful, as Mr Murray has received numerous offers from artists who desire to appear on that occasion.

THE monthly committee meeting of the Music Hall Sick Fund Provident Society will be held at the York Hotel on Wednesday next at 2·0 p.m. All members who are able to attend are invited to be present, as business of considerable importance is on the agenda for discussion.

MR WORTON DAVID, the new business-manager at the Theatre Royal, Windsor, has just finished touring with his company in Man's Enemy. Mr David has written songs for most of our principal music hall artistes, such as Vesta Tilly, Vesta Victoria, Marie Loftus, Julia Mackey, the late Bessie Wentworth, R. G. Knowles, Gus Elen, Geo. Robey, Harry Ford, Wilkie Bard, and T. E. Dunville. Mr David is also the author of "Short Stories," sung with great success by the well-known comedian, Ernest Shand.

THE LONDON MUSIC HALLS.

THE ALHAMBRA.

Some years ago the patrons of the halls were greatly mystified by an illusion known as "the disappearing lady." A girl was seen seated in a chair, a screen was then placed in front of her for a few seconds, and when it was removed she had, to the bewilderment of the audience, vanished from sight. An illusion which in its ingenious working out is the reverse of the disappearing lady trick was introduced at the Alhambra on Monday evening, under the title of "Dido," and has since been the subject of much discussion as to "how is it done." Briefly described on the programme as "the creation of a woman out of nothing," the new illusion is evidently the work of an inventive genius, and is certainly more mysterious than most stage tricks that have been presented to the public. As far as the apparatus itself is concerned the arrangements are simplicity itself. In the middle of the stage stands a glass tank between five and six feet in length supported on a wooden stand with four legs and the gentleman who apparently works the trick gets into the tank, and also shows that the space between the legs of the stand is vacant. Then buckets are passed along by the attendants and emptied into the glass receptacle until it is nearly full, giving a depth of over two feet. The operator next places a piece of silk drapery over the glass, completely concealing it for a few moments. When the covering is withdrawn a young lady in pink fleshings is seen lying in the water, apparently asleep. The puzzle is, of course, how did she get there? When addressed the lady awakes, rises to the surface, and descends to the stage. The operator then, addressing the audience, remarked that he was afraid only those ladies and gentlemen occupying the front seats could see how the trick was done, and he desired that all should learn how it was worked. Thereupon the illusion was repeated in precisely the same manner, but when the covering was removed, another equally charming young lady was seen reposing in the water, and she also made her way to the stage and disappeared at the the wings. Subsequently the two ladies reappeared and bowed their acknowledgments of the applause. Mr George Scott, the able manager of the Alhambra, may be congratulated on having secured another powerful attraction in "Dido," the latest mystery of the stage.

THE STANDARD.

A cosy corner in the entertainments of the Metropolis is provided at Pimlico, where civilians and military join forces in supporting Mr T. S. Dickie in the conduct of his comfortable hall by crowding it to excess night after night in the full enjoyment of a programme in which all the elements of variety are enlisted. Old favourites consort with new in this week's bill, and of the former Mr G. H. Chirgwin is a sterling example. Like good wine he seems all the better for the keeping and the rare talent which upset the gravity of audiences a quarter of a century since is just as powerful to-day in the interests of mirth. He keeps the house amused by his song of "Good old Pimlico" with special reference to the Standard and Mr Dickie; he exhilarates by his whimsical sayings and the quaint humour of "Fiddle-dee-dee," accompanying himself on the violin, and he entrances by his rendering of "The Blind Boy," which he gives in obedience to popular demand. A most enjoyable time is spent in the company of the "White-Eyed One," but the crowning point of the merriment is reached when he puts on the war-paint of the Kaffir and a ludicrous make-up, and beats a kettledrum, interspersing the native jargon of the black man with some forcible remarks in the King's English, all of which runs its course through incessant peals of laughter. A favourite of no less importance follows in Mr Tom Woottwell, but lately returned from South Africa, where his success has been phenomenal. His low comedy powers have developed exceptionally, and they are employed with effect in the refrain "I don't like a little bit at all" a phrase which has a depth of meaning when humorously applied by the singer. More obvious fun is found in his song "Ole dear," which enables him to give a new sample of an old woman scandal-mongering amongst her acquaintances of the gin-shop. Hicks's Clerks work hard at song and dance, and while away the time agreeably. The drollery of the boy Peter creates laughter in plenty, and the ballad singing and concerted choruses are well done. A lively coon song is given by one young lady, while all her companions dress up as coons and support her in a clever rag-time dance, in which Peter distinguishes himself in the back-bend. A surprise awaits the audience in the performance of Mr Frank Hilbert, "Handcuff King," who, after going through the familiar feat of releasing himself from irons within his cabinet, proceeds to show how the trick is done in full view of the audience. We see him, bound and manacled, produce a key from a pocket with his teeth and unfasten locks, and when we find that the locked and corded box has a collapsible lid opening inwards we are quite prepared for the discovery that the sack so carefully tied and sealed at the top has an opening at the other end through which the performer escapes. Great skill is nevertheless required in this interesting performance, and the cheers which Mr Hilbert receives are well won. Mr Henri Cazman supplies abundant entertainment in his act Le Café Chantant, in which he includes his impersonation of famous men, his imitations at the piano of celebrated musicians, and burlesques of conductors, concluding with some well-appreciated shadowgraphy. Much enjoyment is derived from the singing of Miss Marion Grahame, who has done as much as anyone individually to coax the music hall public into the appreciation of high-class music. Her remarkable voice is employed in "For all Eternity" and "The Star of Bethlehem," in both of which her cultivated singing enraptured her hearers. Miss Dot Hardy varies her coon song, to which she adds a novel dance, with a travesty of a "slavey" whose love affair with a cat's-meat man is made the subject of a tuneful rhyme, and is accompanied by a dance which includes a neatly-turned "Catherine wheel." Miss Florence Yaymen describes the ways of making love as favoured by the gallants of old and those of to-day, and she also revels in a coon song and dance which her dress of emerald green admirably sets off. Orpheus gives some pleasing selections on the saxophone and the oboe, and cleverly depicts on the bugle a stirring battle scene; Howard and Collinson appear in The Porter and the Parcel, in which the lady impersonates a sweet-voiced doll, and her male partner is droll as a railway porter; and Mr Mark Melford and company, in The Tip-Top Flat, keep the mirth alive till the very end of the programme, early contributions to which are made by Miss Ethel Dove, the Kimberley Boys, and Mr Charles Vincent. Mr Maurice Volny is invaluable for his tact and smartness as assistant manager, and Mr Walter Norman is energetic and assiduous at the front of the house.

SHEPHERD'S-BUSH EMPIRE.

The North Sea tragedy and the dastardly conduct of the Russians have, of course, not been allowed to pass unnoticed in the variety theatres, and at the popular place of entertainment which faces the Green at Shepherd's-bush Mr Albert Voyce, of the well-known firm of Verno and Voyce, has this week echoed public opinion in a special verse added to his recitation entitled "Capital and Labour." The couple are also appearing in their musical scena, Father and Son, in which is told the story of an old man who, overwhelmed by the fact that he has lost all his money in Stock Exchange speculations, is about to commit suicide, but is prevented just in the nick of time by his devoted son. The latter, too, is the bearer of good news and so the white-haired old man finds there is little cause for despondency after all, the moral conveyed by the story being contained in the title of the once popular motto song, "Wait till the clouds roll by." Verno and Voyce are very well received, and so, too, is the evergreen comedian Mr R. G. Knowles, who also in his patter introduces an apt reference to the incident which has aroused the indignation and anger of every true Englishman. He relates how an excited individual rushes up to a man and asks which is the quickest way to get to a hospital. "Give three cheers for the Russians" replies the man. Mr Knowles's wheezes, told at expressspeed, are always greatly enjoyed—none more so than the story about the widow who had the remains of her first husband cremated and the ashes utilised for the benefit of his successor on a certain cold and frosty morning. Mr Knowles has even the temerity to joke about the police and to hint that they are sometimes caught napping. But the American comedian is in his very best form when he is discussing the respective merits of "The girl, the woman, and the widow," though his ditties, "Ring Off" and Saturday Night," are items which are also received with abundance of applause. The American Quintet continue to enjoy a large share of popular favour, and their smart singing and dancing quite account for the flattering reception accorded these artistes, who are led by a very energetic and lively young lady, Miss Mattie Bowman. She sings a pretty song, entitled "In the village by the sea," the chorus being taken up by her companions, whose voices harmonise charmingly. One of them also gives an exhibition of his ability as a step dancer, and their performance as a whole is greatly appreciated and applauded. The Florador Quartet are here in their comedy sketch called Naughty Nin, the heroine of which is a romp of a girl who is the plague of her middle-aged father. When it is stated that Nin the Naughty has a rollicking young brother, and that a member of the household is a black page, who is always in mischief the welcome accorded a visitor who arrives in the unavoidable absence of "dear papa" may be better imagined than described. However, the young gentleman makes the best of it, and takes an active part in a burlesque circus performance, Nin appearing as the short-skirted lady who rides round on the horses. The fun is at its height when paterfamilias returns and meets with a boisterous reception, bringing the curtain down upon the merry scene. Rezene and Robini, described as "the two little birds on their perch," appear in the guise of a Russian and a Jap, and go through their funny performance with their usual success. Mr George Brooks, comedian, has a capital song on "grandfather's jokes," which were first told in the time of Noah, and his quaint ditty, "His day's work was done," is as well received as ever. Miss Marie Reeve has a pretty song about "Little Dina," and her dancing is quite a revelation. Miss Lizzie Daniels, in the character of a London work-girl, sings of gay doings at Hampton Court on a holiday occasion, and Princess Pauline scores with her song "Sunny Spain." The Ashers (Agnes and Little Mike) do well in their musical duologue The Dude and the Soubrette. Mr E. H. Dobson ably fulfils the duties of acting-manager, and mention should be made of the good work done by the orchestra, under the direction of Mr Geo. Richardson.

BATTERSEA EMPIRE.

Mr E. E. Giles, the enterprising and popular general manager of the now flourishing little variety theatre in York-road, has staged an important production here this week in the romantic costume sketch, Don Cæsar de Bazan, adapted from the French of MM. Dumanoir and Dennery by Mr William Felton.

Charles II., King of Spain	Mr WILLIAM FELTON
Don José	Mr GEORGE GRAHAME
Don Cæsar de Bazan	Mr FRANK HARDIE
Marquis of Rotondo	Mr O. LILLFORD DELPH
Captain of the Guard	Mr F. O. BISHOP
Landlord	Mr PHILLIPS
A Blind Beggar	Mr G. H. DAY
Lazarillo	Mr LUKE DAWSON
Maritana	Miss IRENE CARLTON

Mr Felton is responsible for an interesting and well-written little playlet that is a decided advance on the usual sensational sketch so often encountered at music-halls, and that it was appreciated by Batterseaites was evidenced by the frequent applause which greeted the dramatic situations that occurred and the many telling lines with which the trifle is studded. We first encounter the impecunious but light-hearted hero, Don Cæsar, in a street in Madrid. All he has left are his creditors and his trusty sword, in the use of which he is particularly expert. He has protected from the soldiers the youth Lazarillo, and, in spite of an edict of the King that anyone caught fighting a duel during Carnival week shall be hanged, is so incensed at the conduct of the Captain of the Guard that he challenges him. He is successful in the encounter, but is, of course, arrested and sentenced to death. A former friend, Don José, Minister of Charles II, King of Spain, asks him if there is any wish he would like granted ere he meets his doom. As he has to die, nothing much troubles the imperturbable Don Cæsar, but he would prefer shooting to the hangman's noose, and this request is readily granted. Don José has discovered that his royal master is infatuated with the fair Maritana, a singing girl who has won the favour of the Queen, and as he has conceived a passion for her Majesty he is anxious that the girl shall become the King's mistress. To further his scheme he asks Don Cæsar if he has any objection to marrying; and as the latter has only half-an-hour or so to live he obligingly consents. Maritana also agrees, on being told it is the wish of the Queen that she shall become a Countess. As she is heavily veiled during the wedding ceremony, neither party is aware of the identity of the other. Don Cæsar is led out to his death; but, Lazarillo having previously extracted the bullets from the guns of the soldiers, he somehow manages to escape. A particularly effective episode occurs in the last scene where the King visits Maritana. He poses as Don Cæsar, her husband, but his advances to the half-frightened girl are not very warmly reciprocated, and he bids her retire to her room for a while. When the real Don Cæsar enters by a window the King is naturally considerably angered, and in answer to a question as to whom he is replies "Don Cæsar de Bazan," the intruder proving his ready wit by announcing himself as the King. The plot of Don José to dishonour the Queen is eventually revealed to the King, and Don Cæsar mortally wounds the scheming Minister ere the curtain falls. The hero's identity being established, he is restored to the anxious Maritana, and is greatly honoured by the monarch he has so befriended. Mr Frank Hardie's company are to be warmly congratulated on their excellent all-round interpretation of this pleasing sketch, the head of the combination giving an effective and finished portrayal of the hero, Don Cæsar, and cleverly indicating the humorous nature of the character. Another admirable enactment was the King Charles II. of Mr William Felton, the author being responsible for a polished and easy impersonation that can be highly praised. Miss Irene Carlton made the most of her opportunities as Maritana, being especially good in the concluding episode; and the other characters were all capably undertaken. The mounting of the sketch fulfilled all requirements. The costumes were supplied by Lewis Benjamin and the wigs by Clarkson, incidental music being composed by Mr C. Howells.

The variety portion of Mr Giles's programme is also of an alluring nature, a couple of eccentric comedians who are responsible for abundant mirth being Foreman and Fannan, "the millionaires" (Percy and Harold). Their conversation is always amusing, and there is a laugh in every verse of their duet, "And the blow almost killed father." Another double turn whose occupancy of the stage is marked by much hilarity are the Harrison Brothers who have a droll "walking" song, and who are especially expert dancers, their contributions being warmly welcomed. The galleryites are given a chance of displaying their vocal abilities in the chorus of the popular "Good-bye, my Blue-bell," for the excellent rendering of which Miss Rose Elliott is loudly complimented; Miss Lily Morris has an admirable comedy song in "Make yourself at home;" Miss Flo Raynor pleases with her singing of "Every night you start your canoodling;" the Sisters Hall are loudly acclaimed for their tuneful rendering of "Sadie, say you won't say nay;" and there is applause in abundance for the couple of songs of Miss Belle Davis, the vocalist receiving valuable assistance from her precocious "pick-chicks," the little darkies being particularly smart in their military uniforms and evolutions. Prince Bendon, ventriloquial comedian, is also in the programme, an attractive feature of which is still the exhibition of photographs in connection with Mr Giles's novel profit-sharing scheme.

WALTHAMSTOW PALACE.

Thanks chiefly to the energetic management of Mr Arthur J. Barclay, who is ever on the alert to secure the best available talent, allied to a keen insight into the requirements of the particular public for which he has to cater, the Walthamstow Palace, in the ten months or so it has been open, has become a notable centre of interest in the locality, a constantly heard expression being one of amazement that the town has existed so long without an establishment of the kind and class. The programme for the current week is no exception to the general rule of "infinite variety," and, while it contains no feature of startling novelty, is well supplied with items of popular and familiar interest. The Three American Idols, if their singing does not exactly recall the vocal triumphs of Melba, Calvé, and Nordica, dance with an agility and grace that are probably beyond the hopes or attainments of these ladies. Jimson's animals, including dogs of various breeds and a sweet little baby "porker," go through some wonderfully clever evolutions. Full of boyish fun, Fern's New York Nippers, in Bedtime, sing prettily and dance with grace and dexterity, their very acceptable turn being received with loudly expressed demonstrations of approval. Mr Herbert La Martine uses with fine effect a powerful voice, one of his songs, of the "plantation" or "coon" order being rendered with astonishing volubility. But Mr La Martine's dancing—justly described as "eccentric"—is still more to the liking of audiences than his singing, and the contortions to which he subjects his limbs quite account for the beads of perspiration that gather on his face as he proceeds. He is greeted with enthusiasm at every performance. A clever and amusing turn is supplied by the Burnells, musical comedy artistes, whose knockabout business provokes roars of laughter and applause. A comic boxing match is one of the funniest things to which we have been treated for some time, and the whole act is richly deserving of its success. Mr Frank Sylvo is certainly as quaint a juggler as could be found in a voyage round the world of variety. His business is as original as it is adroit, and, perpetually producing some totally unexpected development, it keeps the spectator in a constant state of expectation and delight. Miss Edie and Mr Harold Finden provide an agreeable variation in their clever and successful farce, A Desperate Remedy. As the exasperating and voluble wife Miss Finden acts with great animation, while Mr Finden rattles through the part of the husband, who finally triumphs, with much comedy power. The Boisset Troupe wind up the attractive bill with their rollicking piece of pantomimic absurdity, The Wild West, and keep the audience in a state of mad hilarity from the rise of the curtain to its fall. All artists—and their name is legion—work with a will, and never allow the action to flag for a single instant. The Palace orchestra, under the direction of Mr H. Petersen, give a spirited rendering of the overture to Sullivan's Gondoliers.

FIRES IN THEATRES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

Sir,—An interview on the adoption of fire resisting material on the stage of the Alhambra, which has appeared this week in the columns of one of your contemporaries, has been published without my seeing the reduction of the interview to print, or approving its accuracy.

Many of the statements which I am supposed to have made are so very inaccurate as to be most seriously misleading, and in most instances have existed only in the imagination of the writer.

Will yo do me the kind favour of inserting this letter in your widely read columns?

Yours faithfully, ALFRED MOUL,
Chairman of the Alhambra Company, Limited.
23, Charing-cross-road W.C., Oct 27, 1904.

HENRI CAZMAN has returned to London from his booking tour and engagements in the provines, having visited in the last few weeks over twenty towns and interviewed some thirty managers. He is appearing this week at the Royal Standard, Pimlico, with his charming wife, Miss Florence Yaymen, erstwhile known as Mam'zelle Flossie.

MR HARRY LAUDER, the canny Scot, has returned to London this week to fulfil a series of engagements. It was in 1900 that he made his first appearance in London—at Gatti's, Westminster-bridge-road. He was taking a holiday, and just to find out something about London audiences he gave a trial show through the kind auspices of Mr Walter Munroe. The patrons of Gatti's simply went wild over him; and within forty-eight hours he had secured contracts for years ahead at all the principal London halls.

MISS JENNIE STEELE is opening a variety agency (for ladies only) in Liverpool. Her permanent address will be advertised in our columns next week.—Miss Edna Cragge has been secured by Miss Daisy De Roy as her principal boy—It was Miss Amy Milton who proved such an attractive turn at the Hounslow Varieties last week, not Hilton as stated.—Mrs Allan M'Askell, now in Scarbrough Hospital, had a relapse on Wednesday last, and her condition is critical.

MISS ANNIE PURCELL is rapidly progressing towards complete recovery. She will have to stay in Birmingham at least another week before she is able to be moved, and then she will be taken by her husband, Mr De Reeder, to Southsea to recuperate. Meanwhile she is anxious to convey her thanks to all kindly inquirers.

MISS CLORINDA THURTELL (Mrs E. V. Page) will make her reappearance on the variety stage at the Empress, Brixton, on Monday next. This charming lady is sure of the warmest of welcomes from the Empress patrons, where her husband is held in high esteem.

THE Grand Annual Concert in aid of the Brixton and Streatham Omnibus Men's Sick and Benevolent Fund will take place as usual at the Empress, Brixton, on Thursday, Nov. 7. Over fifty variety artistes have kindly volunteered their services to strengthen the usual strong bill here, among them being Marie Lloyd, Will Evans, George Mozart, Peggy Pryde, Lily Langtry, Daisy James, Katie Lawrence, Chirgwin, Ethel Yorke, Lottie Lennox, Harry Pleon, and Little Maudie Francis.

THE Brothers Edgar, 77, Kennington-road, S.E., desire to acknowledge with thanks the following donations for the widow of the late Abe Holt:—Leo Dryden, £1 1s.; per Paul Mill (Lowestoft Charity Sports), 10s. 6d.; Griff, 5s.; W. H. Clemart, 5s.; Ted Missouri, 2s. 6d.; and W. H. Howard, 2s. 6d.

THE M.H.A.R.A. AND ITS BUSINESS.

In our last issue we gave a report of the eighth annual meeting of members of the Music Hall Artistes' Railway Association. At that meeting there arose certain questions involving a condition of things which was found to be quite outside the province of the Association. Before, however, dealing with those matters which formed a source of animated discussion which still goes on among individual members, we think it necessary to give, briefly, the history of the Association, and show what was responsible for its foundation and the particular business with which it was concerned.

In October, 1886, Mr C. Douglas Stuart, the present energetic secretary, started an agitation on behalf of music hall artistes for the reduction of railway rates, so that they might have the same benefits that the theatrical people enjoyed. The first concession he obtained was the reduction of one penny in cloakroom fees. When the question of reduced fares for railway travelling came up for consideration, the companies found at first that they could not offer any relief in this direction because as they said, it would be difficult to know who was and who was not a music hall artist. Mr Stuart and his friends were, therefore, advised to form an association, and on Nov. 8, 1896, a large meeting of members of the variety profession was held in Kennington-road, when they decided to band themselves into an association. That Association started on its career in February of the following year. With so much progress made, it was comparatively easy work to draw up a memorial and get it signed by 3,000 artists. That memorial, among other things, asked for a reduction of a quarter of the ordinary railway fare. A conference of the general managers of the different railway lines was held at the Clearing House at King's Cross, and a little later the railway people received a deputation consisting of Messrs Dan Leno, the late Charles Morton Eugene Stratton, Harry Randall, Joe Elvin, Wal Pink, Fred Millis, Douglas White, Douglas Stuart, and Adderly Howard.

Mr Howard acted as spokesman for the party, and the various gentlemen were introduced by Mr James Bailey M.P. The outcome of it all was that in the following August a letter was received by Mr Stuart from the Railway Clearing House to the effect that the general managers had agreed to allow music hall artists, in parties of not less than five, to travel at three-quarters fare. This concession came into force on Oct. 1, 1897.

There was no agreement entered into with the railway companies in respect of the period of time over which the concession should take effect, and it could, therefore, be withdrawn at any moment, without so much as a week's notice. The general managers of the railway companies gave Mr Stuart and his friends to understand very clearly that the cards of membership must only be given to bonâ-fide music hall performers, and Mr Stuart agreed to make himself personally responsible for this provision being carried out. At a later conference with the railway managers, when certain details as to the working of the arrangement were considered, Mr Stuart and others undertook on behalf of the Association to devote the profits derived from subscriptions equally between the railway and music hall charities, of course, after all expenses of the Association had been paid. Two or three years after the Association had been started the railway companies made a new rule to the effect that they would not be responsible for loss of, or damage to, luggage belonging to music hall artists who might be travelling at the reduced rate. To meet this difficulty the committee of the M.H.A.R.A. arranged with the Ocean Accident and Guarantee Corporation for an insurance policy which would, in the first place, cover any possible loss in transit, and, in the second place, would ensure the artists against accidents and death while going to and from an engagement.

Quite recently the committee of the M.H.A.R.A. approached the railway companies and inquired whether the latter would sanction the Association being turned into what might be called a Music Hall Artists' Protection Union. The theatrical managers to the railway concerns were unable to give a definite answer there and then, but stated that they had every reason to believe that were the Association to attempt anything on the lines indicated the railway concessions would be taken away. Last year, unfortunately, the M.H.A.R.A. committed what might be called an error of judgment. With the best possible intentions, a sub-committee of the Association was authorised to be formed to deal with the questions of the barring clause, the closing of music halls, and changes of proprietorship. The sub-committee sat on a good many occasions, arranged several interviews with prominent managers, and collected a host of opinions and a mass of evidence. It was neither the intention nor the wish of this sub-committee to set itself at war against proprietors and managers, but it was the earnest desire of its members to act as mediators, if possible, between managers and artists, and to solve in the most amicable manner the vexed and still undecided problem of a "universal contract." What was the result of these proceedings? To put it vulgarly, the whole thing fizzled out, no agreement was arrived at between managers and artists, and not the slightest improvement or alteration in the previously existing condition of affairs was effected. We blame the Association—an association whose principal and almost sole business it is to attend to the railway travelling requirements of members of the variety profession—for interfering in a matter in which it was not in the slightest way concerned in which its interests were not in the slightest degree affected, and in which it had no more jurisdiction or power to force its decisions than the ordinary man in the street. The principal reason why we blame the Association for—however good-naturedly—attempting to fight the cause of the artists, is that they created a wrong impression of the objects of the Association. As we have already pointed out, the Association was founded to secure railway benefits as its title implies. Do the railway companies wish to be concerned with the manner in which an artist's contract is drawn up, or how much salary he gets, or do they care one jot whether an artist appears within a mile of a certain music hall within a certain period or not? We should hardly think so. Neither, we imagine, would they desire to be in any way mixed up with the inner workings of music halls. One has only got to consider the question for a few seconds, and one conclusion only can be arrived at, viz., that the railway companies will not, if they can help it, allow a railway association—an association founded primarily at their instigation—to become involved, to its own detriment, in the troubled atmosphere of trades unionism and of disagreements between employer and employed.

We are fully aware of the fact that the M.H.A.R.A. has done good work in other directions than merely railway travelling. Members have the advantage of free medical advice at the hands of doctors in London and the provinces, and, as we have already stated, they are insured against accidents and death. The railway companies willingly gave their consent to these arrangements being made. But that is a very different thing from asking them to become parties to a quarrel which, however it ends, benefits them not, and in which they have no more interest than the man in the moon. It was stated at the meeting of the Association last week that it had a reserve fund of nearly £400. It was thought by some members that this amount could not be better employed than in fighting sketch questions, barring clause agreements, and in other ways in which the artists are now passive resisters against the managers. How far would that £400 go in a law case? Between a couple of counsel, probably in one action alone, the whole of the money would vanish as quickly as a fish between two cats. And what then? Then the Association would find itself in a practically bankrupt state. A reserve fund must be kept at the bank to preserve the credit of the Association. In the event of the railway companies withdrawing their concessions, the Musical Hall Artists' Railway Association would cease to exist as it is at present constituted. Out of the reserve fund the salaries of the staff, the rent of the office, and the debts would have to be paid; otherwise the Association would not die a very graceful and peaceful death. It is extremely unlikely that the railway companies would consent to the money which is now annually paid to their charities being used for trades union purposes. But apart from that, it seems to us that the whole of the cash at the command of the Association, after paying bare expenses, would not be sufficient for the necessities which would arise were the Association to be converted into a grievance-redressing institution. Let those who want a combination of this kind start one by all means, but it must be perfectly distinct from the Music Hall Artists' Railway Association.

"MR." HENGLER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

Sir,—I have seen John M. Hengler's "comment" in your issue of last Saturday.

My advertisement in your paper brought me close on 500 replies, and of these nearly 350 were addressed "A. Hengler, Esq.," or "Albert Hengler, Esq." This, I think, proves that the people for whom the advertisement was intended are quite sure who "Mr" Hengler is. Your correspondent takes too much upon himself. Who, in his sound senses, would imagine for a moment that the notice referred to John M. Hengler or his son?

My relation has no cause for worry. He will never be mistaken for "Mr" Hengler either by members of the profession or by the public of the city of Glasgow. Yours faithfully,

ALBERT HENGLER.

Glasgow, Oct. 27, 1904.

AT Clerkenwell Sessions, on Wednesday, Arthur George Spry, twenty-two, pleaded "Guilty" to stealing a basket belonging to George Govetti, a music hall artiste. Mr Slade Butler, for the prosecution, said there were other charges of theft, but he did not think it necessary to proceed with them. Detective-sergeant Rose said that the prisoner had been sent to gaol on five occasions. He was released in April, and since then twenty-four complaints had been made to the police concerning him. He went about personating Mr Spry, of Spry and Austin, music hall artistes, and in that gentleman's name victimised managers, artistes, jobmasters, and lodging-house keepers. He engaged artistes to "do a turn" for him, and borrowed money by saying he had left his purse at home. In the present case he had petitioned the Home Office, and denied his previous convictions. As a result, the Home Office had directed each officer who had had him in custody to attend and prove the offences against him. Counsel, on Spry's behalf, urged that the prisoner was not quite right in his mind, and asked for an adjournment for the prison doctor to examine him. Mr Loveland-Loveland, K.C., after consideration, refused the application, and sentenced Spry to three years' penal servitude and two years' police supervision. Instructions were given to keep a close watch upon him.

AT the Thames Police-court, on Monday, an application was made to Mr Mead for a licence permitting a boy, twelve years of age, to perform at an East-end music hall. It was stated he was a member of a troupe of acrobats consisting of fifteen performers. The lad in question had to appear as a clown, but his duties were simply to walk about the stage. In reply to Mr Mead, the applicant for the licence said the boy would go to school this week at Poplar. Next week they were engaged to perform at Hartlepool for six nights. Mr Mead—Then how can a boy get educated under those circumstances? I suppose he is never able to go to school on a Monday?—Applicant—That is so, but his sister teaches him. Mr Mead—The law of the land is that every boy, up to fourteen, should go to school, and if the lad in question went to a different school each week he could not receive ordinary education. If I granted the request it would be assisting applicant to evade the law. I shall not grant the application for the reason that it would be placing an obstacle in the way of the boy being properly educated.

MR MICHAEL NOLAN leaves town for three months on Monday next. This is a great loss to London, as the genial Irishman is singing some capital songs just now. However, he will be able to give his admirers in the provinces a chance to renew their acquaintance with him. They will find "Mike" in excellent form.

A MOST interesting picture was shown on Wednesday night on the Bioscope at the Palace Theatre of the damaged trawlers at Hull.

THE WOELLHAFS (Fred and Marie) resume business next Monday at the Opera House, York. Mrs W. has entirely recovered from her recent illness, during which Mr Fred Woellhaf had a very successful season at Rhyl with Mr E. H. Williams's famous Merrie Men.

MISS MAUD ESMOND successfully produced at the Tivoli this week a stirring number, entitled "Wake up, Britannia!" the last verse of which deals with the recent Russian outrage in the North Sea. The song was received with unbounded enthusiasm. It is the joint work of Messrs Alf. J. Lawrence and Harry Gifford. Miss Esmond has also secured two other songs from the same authors, respectively entitled "My Jersey Lily" and "Two Little Tell-tale Eyes," for immediate production.

"RUSSIAN BEAR, BEWARE" is the title of a song written by Mr Cayley Calvert, the well-known writer of sketches. It was sung on Friday evening at very short notice by Miss Marguerite Broadfoote with great success at four halls.

HOUDINI, the "handcuff king," who is this week appearing at Liverpool, has accepted a challenge from four seamen of H.M.S. Eagle, R.N.R., to free himself from recognised ship irons used years ago for mutiny on the high seas. With these irons the seamen are "to manacle and truss him up in the old-fashioned punishment method; Houdini to lay on his back, with his hands manacled to his knees, a staff placed behind his knees and between his arms, holding him in an immovable position; also heavy leg irons locked on his ankles."

MEMBERS of the M.H.A.R.A. are specially requested to note that Mr Campbell, of the Tyne Theatre Buffet, has been appointed agent for the Association in Newcastle-on-Tyne from this date, and that they must apply to him for their vouchers.

MESSRS C. W. MURPHY and DAN LIPTON have this week written Mr George Bastow two funny songs, for which he hopes to secure much popularity. The same writers have also provided Mr Charles Sheard with a novelty in the shape of a ballad dealing with the Stone Age period, entitled "In my lonely cave." Their pantomime numbers are also in great demand, particularly "Go away, Mister Crocodile," and "If I had a girl as nice as you."

ADVERTISERS and SUBSCRIBERS who are moving about, and who have their Copy of "THE ERA" sent direct from this Office, 49, Wellington-street, Strand, are requested to forward the Addresses for their Papers [not later' than the Tuesday] in each Week.

THE SHOWMAN WORLD.

(FROM A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Second Fair at Stratford-on-Avon was well maintained by the following shows and fairground novelties:—Wadbrook's electrograph, J. Wright's fine art gallery, Tolley's school of boxers and athletes, Clarke's switchback gondolas, Strickland's steam galloping horses, Butlin's midget mountain ponies, Dingley's miniature roundabout set, the pony circus, highfliers, park swings, &c, by Messrs Strickland, Clarke, and Dingley; shooting ranges, Morris tubes, and bottle batteries by Messrs Wilson, Clarke and Wright; Brooke's photo studio, and cokers; roll-up boards, variety stalls, &c., by Messrs Butlin, Kemp, Coley, Butler, Harris, Willis, Herbert Wilson, and others.

SOUTHAM FAIR on this round had for the delight of its show-loving crowds the excellent concerns of Sidney Braham, with the trained feathered marvels; John Wright's Royal academy of fine arts, Polley's champion boxers, Wilson's shooting saloon, the swing boats and highfliers of Messrs Clarke and Wilson, Kemp's bazaar, and Herbert's variety stalls, &c.

ASTWOOD BANK, says our local correspondent, is worth considering for private business by the proprietors and managers of circuses, menageries, cinématograph, or variety theatres; in fact, travelling entertainments of all kinds may well make a note of Astwood Bank. So says the man on the spot. At present Holloway's portable New Empire Theatre is doing excellent business at Astwood Bank with the following popular plays:—Uncle Tom's Cabin, Honour Thy Father. The Factory Girl, Gold; or, the Miser's Crime, Maria Martin, and The Dumb Man of Manchester. There are pleasing and up-to-date variety turns by Messrs W. Redmond and Wm. Holloway, and a capital répertoire of laughable farces and old comedies. Wadbrook's superb show, the electric palace of living pictures, "The World's Events Day by Day," has been doing record business at Alcester this last week.

WORKSOP kept its October fair in fine weather with a record attendance of visitors, Worksop being the centre of a large agricultural district. The pleasure fair was a boon and a blessing to its busy workers, who came from far and near to enjoy its fun and jollity. Holland's Cinématograph show with up-to-date pictures was a big attraction, and gave unanimous satisfaction. Messrs Tuby and Son's splendid electric Venetian gondolas and the same firm's fine range of swings did excellent business. So also the other caterers of amusement did well. Amongst these were Mr T. Tuby, sen., with a Winchester range, and Mr A. Illingworth, with coker and other varieties.

CLITHEROE, an important town of north-east Lancashire, thirty-three miles from Manchester, is a thriving centre of the cotton trade and also famous for its paper mills. With a population of 112 000, it has two fairs—one held at the end of March and the other at the end of October.

FOR the fair this week were:—Wm. Clark, jun.'s, celebrated Cinématograph, Wm. Weston and J. H. Smith, with boxers and athletes, Peter Makin's steam roundabouts, the galloping horses, Mrs Holden's flying ostriches, and the No. 2 set, the steam yachts, Starkie's range of highfliers and rifle saloon, W. Royle's Winchester range, and Mr Wm. Taylor's bottle battery; all the fun of the fair in the shape of coker shies, Emma sheets, dolly frames, window smashers, prize tubs, &c., were provided by Messrs Butterworth, Shorrock's, Freer, Slater, Gallagher, Broughton, W. H. Taylor, Stanley Wilson, and Ingram. The fair and its arrangements reflect the greatest credit on the indefatigable and courteous Inspector of Markets and Fairs, Mr Walter Clayton.

CHICHESTER boasts an old-time fair known as Sloe Fair. Great excitement prevailed in the cathedral city owing to the rumour that Sloe Fair was being held for the last time. The good people of the city may take heart of courage. Fairs do not die so easily. The only reason given is that the old fair ground is wanted for the extension of the workhouse. Sloe Fair may have to seek a new habitation, and that is all. This excitement about its possible death added to the interest, and brought vast crowds of visitors to the old cathedral city. All the attractions of a well-ordered fair were present, and good business was done by the showmen with entertainments which included switchback railways, several roundabouts, a Cinématograph theatre, shooting saloons, swings, coker shies, dolly frames, and a crowd of minor novelties. In the evening the spacious field in North-gate was one mass of people, and when the fun was at its highest it was a little difficult to think that this could possibly be the last of Sloe Fair, which has been so long regarded by a great portion of the lower classes as the one important event of the year. One could more easily imagine Sloe Fair in another and perhaps less objectionable spot; but its abolition—well last night it seemed out of the question.

ANOTHER link in the showmen's ranks is snapped asunder. The mortal remains of Alf Williams, whose "ghost illusion and cinématograph" have travelled all over the Lancashire fairs and wakes for the past thirty years, was borne to his last resting place at Chapelfields, from his residence at "Besses o' th' Barn," on Tuesday, Oct. 25. Among those present we noticed Mrs Alice Williams (widow), Mr Joe Williams, Mr and Mrs Chas. Lee (née Janey Williams), Bert Williams (nephew) and wife, Mr and Mrs Geo. Taylor, Mr and Mrs Wilson Clegg, Mr David Lomax, Mr Willie Clarke (Colonel Clarke, an old friend, was unable to attend), Mr and Mrs W. Taylor, Messrs Harry and Richard Taylor, Mr and Mrs Harry Lewis, Mr N. J. Stanley, Mr Wm. Power, Mrs W. Edwards and son. The bearers were the brothers George, Ernest, and Arthur Stanley (who had been members of his company from childhood), assisted by Mr C. Docherty. More than a hundred mourners and sympathisers attended, and the coffin was completely covered by floral emblems of esteem—"Good old Alf," "May the earth rest lightly on him," "R. I. P."

THE Herring Fair at East Ilsley drew crowds of visitors. The pleasure fair is evidently growing in public esteem.

SHEFFIELD October fair may now be considered as an established fixture. It forms a capital link between Hull and the Yorkshire back-end fairs, and is entirely owing to the business enterprise of Mr John Collins, the lessee of the ground. The locale of the fair was the well-known and centrally situated cattle market, and the arrangements of the ground were in every way satisfactory.

THE shows on the outer circle here were Prince Samonda's oriental illusions, Mr Frank Gees and his fistiana artists, Mr Fred Darnell's two-headed giant, Mr Joe Wilson's athletes, and Messrs Holdsworth and Powell's fine art show. Mr Frank Walton's photographic studios. Machines of the first order were Mr John Collins's magnificent four-abreast, the twin tugs of the same proprietor, M. Lieske's gyrating wheel, P. Collins, Limited, racing cockerels, P. Collins, Limited, rolling gondolas, and the first-class shooting concerns of Messrs Geo. H. Cornwell, Wm. Radcliffe, T. Smith, and T. Hughes. Roll-ups, pannum stalls, Krugers, &c., were provided by Messrs D. Johnson, G. Sutherland, S. Mercer, J. Smith, J. Middlebrook, J. T. Cooper, W. Stewart, C. Bliss, Ingham, Towers, and Ackroyd.

THE Parliamentary Session of 1904 undoubtedly marks the most important stage in the organised defence of the show business. Carefully preparing the way beforehand, the Guild Executive Committee determined to carry the war into the camp of the enemy. Not merely active resistance, but a bold policy of retaliation was resolved upon. The Private Bills Committee were to be shown the gross injustice of public bodies in their continued attacks on the trade rights of showmen and the fair rights of the people.

DURING three previous Sessions of Parliament heavy expenses had been borne cheerfully and exhausting work undertaken readily because showmen were advised by their legal and Parliamentary experts, that not only had they been successful in their efforts of defence, but that a strong case was being built up for a counter stroke; also, that when the time arrived for presenting that case, then an appeal would be made to Parliament to protect showpeople from the persistent attack in Private Bill legislation upon the fairground industry.

THREE sessions of hard work and constant vigilance had given the showman most important results. (1) It was shown that no legislation in restraint of trade can pass into law by Private Bill. It was the showmen who made this principle of our constitution clear. Only by Public Bill and after full Parliamentary discussion and national publicity may such legislation be attempted. You cannot legislate by Private Bill to cut down the trade of your neighbour. This all seems simple and clear enough, yet in the Bill of the Eccles Corporation were clauses in distinct and open restriction, nay, prohibition, of trade. That Bill but for the opposition of the Guild would have passed into law with these penalty clauses in it. (2) The next important principle defined was that corporate bodies should not have an absolute monopoly of fairs and fairgrounds. "Free trade in fairs" was the victory won over Halifax Corporation. Then (3) it was decided that powers in excess of the general laws could not be obtained by Private Bill. This, too, is very important to understand. It is already law that municipal corporations under various Local Government Acts have full and ample powers to govern and control all entertainments, whether held in permanent or portable structures. Bye-laws for good rule and order and for the moral good of the community are within the powers already possessed by public bodies. Yet until the showmen pointed it out to the House of Commons, corporations in their Private Bill legislation were seeking additional powers to frame bye-laws, not merely to regulate, but to prohibit.

THE reason of this was, that in many instances showmen successfully opposed the sanction of bye-laws. The law as it is provides that forty days' public notice must be given in order that objections may be considered, and all private rights duly conserved. It was the success of the Guild in opposing back bye-laws that led corporations to try and smuggle through in Private Bills the drastic penalising restrictions they had failed to obtain under the ordinary law.

MANSFIELD was the test case on this phase of the struggle. The corporation was told to use the law already in existence, which gave them all the control for the public good that Parliament meant the authorities to have. New laws in excess of the general law could not be obtained by Private Bill. In the face of these facts the question naturally arose—how long must the showmen continue to oppose (in their own interest, it is true) these gross attempts on the part of local authorities to narrow down public rights, and to hinder and penalise a very important industry?

THE answer was given by the Parliamentary Committee when dealing with the Bill promoted by the Urban District Council of Acton, an important metropolitan suburb. Despite the fact that East Ham had been defeated in the previous sessions, the Acton Bill sought the same powers to penalise shows and showmen as were thrown out of the East Ham Bill. Then it was that on the general grounds of justice and fair-play the showmen's case was laid before the committee, and a plea made that it was time that corporations ceased asking for powers again and again denied them. Showmen had for four years, at great cost, opposed in every case these restrictive proposals. Now, it was urged, corporations ought to be made to understand the injustice of compelling showmen to appear and submit evidence and arguments over and over again on questions that the committee had already and persistently decided in their favour.

THE end was the throwing out of the Bill the objectionable clauses, and also, to mark the committee's sense of the repeated vexatious annoyance showmen had endured, the showmen's costs as against the District Council of Acton were allowed. These costs, amounting to £150, was the price Acton had to pay to be taught the lesson that the House of Commons respects and protects its showmen citizens in their movable dwellings and in their daily work and means of honest livelihood as faithfully as it protects other classes and other industries.

WE hope to deal next week with some of the far-reaching benefits and results of this brilliant victory for the showmen of the Empire.

WE shall endeavour to outline a plan of work—a still further advance for the Showmen's Guild—in order that these hard-won results may not be frittered away or lost. Seventy thousand people are interested, and deeply too, in the preservation of an ancient and honourable craft, and, more important still, 50,000,000 people of the United Kingdom are interested in the preservation of their national holidays, fairs, feasts, and wakes.

MR ALBERT H. HENGLER, circus proprietor, appeared before Mr Registrar Atkinson at the Manchester Bankruptcy Court on Monday last for his adjourned public examination. Mr Walter Cobbett, who represented the debtor, asked Mr Hengler whether he wished to give any explanation of the suggestion that he had carried on his business at a time when he was insolvent and could not pay each debt as it fell due. Mr Hengler replied that he considered that at the time he filed his petition he was solvent, and that he had enough stock-in-trade and assets to pay all his existing liabilities. Further, he thought he was justified in going on with his business by past experience. In 1889 he was in a worse fix, and recovered himself. The Registrar — The Official Receiver does not suggest that there is anything more than a technical offence? The Official Receiver replied that that was so. There had been at least forty writs against the debtor within the last two years, but this was one of those fluctuating businesses—like that of the theatrical business—in which the creditors knew there were "ups and downs," and relied upon a future success for the payment of their past debts. "I do not seek," the Official Receiver said, "to treat Mr Hengler's as an ordinary business. Some consideration is to be extended to the debtor in this case." The Registrar—It is a technical offence; the writs were there. The Official Receiver—Yes, but they were met. The examination was closed.

MISS NELLY WILK, the champion lady shaver of the world, who is performing at the Hippodrome, Wigan, this week, has drawn crowded houses nightly to witness her wonderful feat of shaving thirty men under forty-five minutes. She has beaten all records up to Wednesday, as she shaves these thirty men with one hand, two hands, and blind-folded in 31mins. 25sec. She challenges the world now for £1,000.

BOSTOCK AND WOMBWELL'S MANAGERIE gave performances in Lincoln on Monday and Tuesday, the representative character of the collection and the daring of the animal trainers being great features of the old show.

DALTON-IN-FURNESS begins the Westmoreland and Cumberland cycle of hiring fairs. Here were Manders' Star menagerie; Randal Williams kinemato theatre and varieties (Messrs Monte Brothers), and the High-class cinématograph exhibition of Richardson Brothers, Limited, and John Cooper, each show with its special star attraction. Richardson Bros. also exhibited their fine steam roundabout, the flying ostriches, Sheeran was present with his novelty booth, Murphy's grand set the gondola switchback, had a constant throng of patrons. Rifle saloons and bottle batteries were supplied by Messrs Newsome, Sheeran, and Casey. These, with others, catered with minor novelties.

WE have news to hand of an ancient south country fair—Maidstone. Its Charter fairs date back to Edward VI. and are four in number, but one of these has fallen into abeyance. We now have fairs in May, June, and October. The concerns at the October fair held on the 17th and 18th were Pettigrove's aggregation of fairground novelties, the switchback gondolas, the steam gallopers, the highfliers, the Winchester range, the rifle saloons, and Emma and coker sheets, with Mr Pettigrove; Professor Adams, with athletes and boxers; Messrs Birby and Penfold, with shooters, cokers, and varieties. There were also the usual attendant crowd of stallholders and novelty vendors.

QUIET and unassuming as Lorenzo Crick was, there were few of his day who could point to a professional life and experience so varied and interesting. Early in life he became celebrated as an animal trainer. Lorenzo and his dog and monkey circus was a big attraction at the London music halls thirty years ago.

LATER on in life he joined forces with Chadwick's show, and was a big success at the Royal Agricultural Hall, Islington, at the World's Fair. Then he took regularly to fairground business, travelling his own show, the dog and monkey circus, assisted by his clever sons in acrobatic turns and clowning. This entertainment was for years a welcome feature at London suburban fairs and fêtes. Ultimately he found his way into Lancashire. Here his talent took a new and lucrative turn. The Lorenzo Family became famous at the great fairs with their varieties, throwing games, coker sheets, &c. A well-known and esteemed showman, generous to a fault, upright and just in all his dealings, his tragic death evoked universal sorrow, not only on the fairgrounds of the busy Lancashire towns, but also amongst the host of friends whom his sterling character had made.

THORNE, near Doncaster, held its fair on the 21st, and good business rewarded the efforts of the local showmen.

HOLLOWAY'S New Empire Theatre at Astwood Bank are now showing to large houses, and their visit to the needle town has been a great success.

AT the recent fair at Stratford-on-Avon Mr and Mrs T. Clarke generously offered, through Alderman Pearce, the use of their superb machine, the switchback gondolas, for three hours in aid of the Saturday Hospital Fund. The committee of the Fund accepted the gift with both hands, with the result that the Fund benefited to the extent of £25 14s. 1d. When the last trip was ended, the good alderman warmly thanked Mr and Mrs Clarke for their kind thought and generosity. Three cheers were heartily given by the crowd to Mr and Mrs Clarke and their working staff, who, of course, gave their services free.

THE concerns at Goole, which also follows Hull Fair, were Mr Geo. H. Kemp's progressive show; Mr Enoch Farrar's two shows, the fine art and the distorting mirrors; Professor W. Gibson, "the Fakir of Fakirs;" Mrs E. Longman's giant baby; and Messrs G. Clark's and J. Stewart's novelty shows. The machines included the lessee's (Councillor G. T. Tuby's) galloping horses, Messrs Fisher and Doubtfire's manual swings, Mr George Turner's photographic saloon and the shooting galleries, dolly-stalls, &c., of Messrs J. Baines, M. Whatmore, and W. Fisher.

THERE are few large towns in Lancashire which better appreciate their fairs than Wigan. The hardy sons of toil—and the daughters of toil, too (Wigan is the town of the pit-brow lassie)—invade the fairground, and, in every possible way, enjoy the fun of the fair and make merry with their fellows. The pleasure fair commenced on the 21st and lasted a whole week. Amongst the shows were Proctor's London circus, Wm. Clark and Sons' theatre of animated photography, James Norman's Cinématograph exhibition, Wright's royal academy of fine arts, and Gal-Hague's black and white boxers. The array of machines was a particularly fine one, and included John Green's gondolas, Wm. Mitchell's flying ostriches, Holmes's steam galloping horses, Mitchell's steam yachts, Shaw's steam swings, Ben Mitchells galloping horses, R. H. Williams' bicycles, Wm. Mitchell, jun.'s steam galloping horses, Holland's range of highfliers, Shuttleworth's park swings, and the Winchester ranges and rifle saloons of Messrs Jewell, Henshaw, and R. H. Williams. The refreshment booths were by Messrs Bowser, Ingham, Ormerod, J. W. Butterworth, and Mrs Harrison. The throwing games cokers, Emma sheets, and varieties were by the Lorenzo and Horton families, Messrs Holmes, Dearden, and others.

SHERBORNE, Dorset, has one of the most quaint survivals of Olde Merrie England in its Pack Monday Fair. This year it has been held on the latest possible date upon which it can take place—the function being arranged to be held on the first Monday following the 10th, and that date falling on a Monday this year it was perforce held on the Monday following. Towards the end of last week the rumbling of caravans through the street betokened that the pleasure department would not be lacking, whatever might be the case with the business part. These were located, as before, in the Half Moon Field, and consisted of a couple of shows, two roundabouts, a switchback, and the usual retinue of "three shies a-penny," shooting galleries, and confetti stalls. The principal shows and attractions were Anderton and Rowland's exhibition, Chipperfield's show M. Hill's roundabouts, Brewer and Son's steam horses, and varieties, stalls, &c., by Messrs Connolly, C. Heal, and others.

MOST of the above anticipated the fair by opening up on Saturday, and the evening being fine they were largely patronised. During Sunday a large number of people visited the fair as usual, and in the afternoon the members of the United Free Church Mission Band held a service, which was attended by a large congregation of orderly and reverent demeanour, including many of the "vandwellers." A most impressive address was given by the Rev. B. S. Morris. Late on Sunday evening a somewhat heavy rain came on, but this did not deter the "young hopefuls," and some of the "old hopefuls" as well, from assembling on Greenhill to take part in the customary march of "Teddy Roe's Band." To attempt to describe all the "instruments" would be impossible, but of bugles there were half a score, frying pans and tin pots many, horns galore, bells some, and a miscellaneous collection of oddments too numerous to mention. Monday breakfast time saw the streets muddy and wet, and a drizzly rain was falling. Fortunately the weather of the preceding weeks had dried up the ground, and locomotion was much more pleasant than was the case last year. Later in the morning the weather improved, and the remainder of the day was comparatively fine. Throughout the day the people flocked into the town, and the stall proprietors, who lined the parade and corner of Half Moon-street, and who sold a legion of things, from Bibles and other literature down to toys, black pudding, ginger-bread, sweets, polonies, crockery ware, &c., did a roaring trade. Coming to the pleasure part of the fair there is not a great deal to add, save to say that it was fully patronised, and, judging from the covering of confetti on the shoulders of hundreds as they passed on their homeward way, they must have had a good old time.

THE West Hartlepool Corporation have set apart the bottom yard of the Town Market, situated in Lynn-street, West Hartlepool, for the accommodation of showmen, and have recently renewed the lease to Mrs Beaumont, who with her own well-known shows opens every Saturday during the year and provides spaces for other showmen calling on the North-Eastern Route. Last Saturday we noticed William Murphy's "Golden Venice," George Paine's royal Cinématograph, Mrs Campbell's abnormal calf, Kitson's three concerns, the cokers, Boer generals, and roll-up boards, Geo. Smith's cup-breakers, the shooting ranges of Mrs Beaumont, the large doll stall, the cokers, the aerial swings, and the striking machines of Messrs Slavin and Watson and others.

TWO miles from West Hartlepool the switchback railway of Messrs W. and B. Murphy is situated.

AT Staindrop, Co. Durham, Mr Walker Hoadley's electric horses are located.

AT Beverley Mr Claude Hamilton's "four-abreast" opened on Saturday.

MR AND MRS E. H. BOSTOCK, of Bostock and Wombwell's well-known menagerie, entertained a large party at dinner at the Angel Hotel, Islington, on Thursday evening. The guests included the artists in the company engaged to go to South Africa and open at Cape Town in four weeks at Mr Bostock's Circus. The chair was taken by Mr Reed, of Agricultural Hall fame, who was supported by Mr Fitt, of Norwich.

THE dinner was elaborate and enjoyable. A neat speech was made by Mr Bostock, wishing the artists "Bon voyage." The chairman, Mr Reed, also gave an eloquent address, reminding the guest that the "Ghost always walked at Bostock's." A happy evening was spent and was concluded by Mr Pearce Butler, who is in charge of the company on the voyage, proposing the toast, "Happy to meet, sorry to part," Mr Bostock adding in his quiet way, "Happy to meet again."

MR PEARCE BUTLER, manager of the Lowestoft Hippodrome since its opening, has left for South Africa on the Tintagel Castle. During the time he has been in Lowestoft he has made a large circle of friends, and they all very much regret his departure. Before starting he was the recipient of a handsome dressing-case. The presentation took place at the Suffolk Hotel, in the presence of Messrs J. Harrold (proprietor of the hotel), J. Yallop, G. Chaston, A. E. Maas, Frank Craig. Mr Harrold, in asking Mr Butler to accept the gift, said it was the spontaneous offering of personal friends, who esteemed Mr Butler highly for his many good qualities. On their behalf he wished him a good voyage, good health, and the best of everything in the future. Mr Butler, who was evidently surprised at the recognition, tendered his hearty thanks. He said his stay in Lowestoft had been a pleasant one, and he should ever remember those who had treated him so kindly.

A TEST case in respect of "portable theatres" came before the Blaina Bench yesterday, when Edward Ebley, theatre proprietor, Blaina, was summoned by the Nantyglo and Blaina District Council for neglecting to deposit plans and sections of a building erected by him at Blaina, contrary to the bye-laws. Mr J. Alex. Shepard, clerk to the Council, prosecuted, and said the Olympia Theatre was constructed wholly of wood, bolted together and easily removed. According to the bye-laws a theatre came under new buildings, and should be of brick, stone, or blocks, and complete plans and sections should be submitted to the Council's surveyor, with a description in writing of what material it was to be constructed, mode of drainage, and water supply. The Clerk (Mr E. H. Davies)—Did you have a licence from the County Council? Mr Shepard—Yes, for stage plays only, as to ingress and egress. The local Councils, he pointed out, had applied to the County Council that this power should be delegated to them, and thus give them the power over the licensing of stage plays as well as that of dealing with the building. This, however, had not been done. The Chairman (Dr. W. G. Williams)—When the County Council grant these licences don't they send their surveyor to ascertain the condition and safety? Mr Shepard—Yes; as to the safety of the building for stage plays. The Clerk—These buildings are portable and temporary? Mr T. G. Powell, Brynmawr (who appeared for Mr Ebley)—Yes.

THE Clerk—Then you would not expect them to be built of bricks and mortar if it was intended to remove, say, in a fortnight's time? Mr Shepard—Yes. We say it is a contravention of the bye-laws, and that it is a public building, only licensed for the purpose of stage plays. Mr Shepard remarked that the Glamorganshire County Council had granted the licensing powers to their Councils. He pointed out that Mr Ebley had refused to sign an agreement similar to one adopted by the Pontypridd Council in a similar case, under which three months' notice could be given to remove or alter. The Clerk—I take it the contention is—are the bye-laws applicable in any way to such a building as this?

MR POWELL contended that, the building having been licensed by the county authority, defendant had met everything required by the Act of Parliament, and that the building was not one within the meaning of the Act of Parliament or the bye-laws. Mr Davies, surveyor to the Nantyglo and Blaina Council, gave evidence, and said the building in question was not an "exempted building" within the meaning of the bye-laws. In reply to the chairman witness said that the agreement defendant was asked to sign was for a wood or corrugated iron building, and if he had signed no proceedings would have been taken. Defendant, however, refused to compromise. Mr Powell said that the building was licensed by the County Council. Was it contemplated by the Legislature that there should be two surveyors and two authorities to visit this place for the purpose of licensing it? He quoted several cases against the summons. Mr Shepard contended that the cases cited had no bearing whatever upon the point; that it was a public building within the meaning of the bye-laws, and should be constructed of brick or stone. The chairman said their Worships had unanimously decided to dismiss the summons, having decided, as a question of fact, that it was not a building within the meaning of the bye-laws.

BRIDLINGTON-BY-THE-SEA is a fair which dates back to the sixteenth century. It is now held on ground acquired by the Corporation specially for the fair under the direction of Mr Robert Williamson, borough markets superintendent. We found the following concerns upon the ground, having journeyed from Hull:—Capt. Thos. Payne's electric Bio cope, Mons. Le Neve and Nora Sullivan's lady wrestlers, Mr Jack Hastings's diminutive humanity, Sahib Leo's Egyptian Hall, Mr Charles Relph's "Wee M'Gregor," the smallest horse in the world; Hastings's queen of prodigious ladies; and the shooting saloon of Mr W. G. Watson. The machines were:—Mr Goldthorpe Marshall's Venetian gondolas, Mr A. Payne's three-abreast British generals, Mr W. Shipley's three-abreast steeplechasers, Messrs Waddington's twin steam yachts, Carvill's manual swings, Watson's overboats, and Alex. Fostiere's juvenile swings. The roll-ups, bogies, coker shies, &c., were provided by Messrs T. Neal, T. H. Loft, W. Carvill, T. Chapman, A. Barker, and H. Wormald.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

Sir,—Some time since my son picked a tin trunk up on the road to Manchester from Altrincham containing some clothes, and as the inside is scratched, giving a name of a circus, I shall be obliged if you will put a short notice in your paper saying that upon a description being forwarded by the owner to me I will return it.

Yours faithfully, S. C. ORTON.

"SERVANTS WANTED."

A Farcical Sketch, Written by Charles S. Kitts, and Produced at Lowestoft, on Monday, Oct. 17.

Mrs Slater	Mrs BARRINGTON
Sophia Bird	Miss EVA REED
Stella Starlight	Miss BREEZLEY
Lord Bangleskea	Mr BARRINGTON
Tipples	Mr JAMES M'ILROY
Penny Nibs	Mr PAT WADDROCK

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Last week was produced at the Lowestoft Hippodrome an entirely new and original farcical absurdity, from the pen of Mr Chas. S. Kitts. A continuous round of laughter and applause accompanied the performance, and the efforts of the artistes were entirely successful. Mr Kitts has given further proof of his ability to furnish the class of entertaining novelty that seems now to be the most in demand by amusement seekers. Mr Will Onda's company of comedians did full justice to the excellent material they had to work upon. The action of the sketch takes place in Mrs Slater's registry office for servants, where a pot-pourri of characters are introduced, causing considerable confusion to themselves and an abundance of genuine amusement to the audience. The backbone of the absurdity rests upon Mr Pat Waddrock, who as the precocious office boy seldom misses an opportunity to keep the fun going fast and furious. He is breezy, nimble, and original, and a great acquisition to the company. Mr J. M'Ilroy and Mr Barrington as Tipples and Lord Bangleskea added considerably to the general enjoyment. As Sophia Miss Eva Reed looked and played the character of the stuttering maid of all work to the letter. Mrs Barrington is all that can be desired in the rôle of Mrs Slater, and the Stella Starlight of Miss Breezley is both dignified and impressive. Judging by the appreciation of the audience there is little doubt as to the future success of Mr Onda's new venture.

MR ERNEST SHAND has a capital new topical song, by P. Braham, entitled "It isn't cricket." Of course, there is already a new verse on the subject that is now filling the minds of everyone.—Rezene and Robini leave town on Monday for five weeks, commencing at the Empire, Cardiff.—Mr W. F. Frame finished his vaudeville tour on Saturday. He will be in London in December for a short season.

MR H. LESLIE BELL, who is at present playing his highly-successful musical comedy tit-bit, A Bit of String, will shortly produce in London an authorised burlesque on John Lawson's Mr Todd of London.

IPSWICH HIPPODROME.

FOUNDATION-STONE LAID.

The Mayor of Ipswich (Alderman Fred Bennett) laid the foundation-stone on Tuesday afternoon of the new Hippodrome, which is being built for Messrs Bostock and Fitt, in St. Nicholas-street, Ipswich, and the ceremony was witnessed by a large number of persons, who, in addition to filling all available space on the site, thronged the streets in the vicinity. The Ipswich Public Band was in attendance, and played several popular airs during the afternoon. Readers may be reminded that it is little more than a month since the announcement was made that Messrs Bostock and Fitt, who run the Norwich Hippodrome on such successful and satisfactory lines, had acquired from the Corporation of Ipswich a site in St. Nicholas-street, on which they were about to erect an up-to-date Hippodrome. Excavating work was commenced on the site soon afterwards by Messrs Parkington and Son, to whom the work of building the Hippodrome has been entrusted, and actual building operations were commenced about a fortnight ago. Mr Frank Matcham, of London, the noted architect for places of entertainment, has drawn the plans, and there is every assurance that the building which is to be erected will possess all the features of a first-class Hippodrome, and fully entitled to that name. It will seat 1,800 persons, who are promised comfortable accommodation both in hot weather and cold, the heating arrangements being on the most approved principles, and there being a sliding roof for use when desirable. The stage will be 56ft. by 38ft., and will be so arranged that equestrian acts can be performed thereon, as well as the ordinary music hall turns. The building is estimated to cost £15,000, and will be open early in the new year.

Mr E. H. Bostock, it may be mentioned, is a proprietor of the world-famed menageries of Messrs Bostock and Wombwell, and also of more than one large circus enterprise. His father was in the same line of business for half a century. Having, for personal reasons, left Glasgow, he intends to become an "East Anglian," so far as residence is concerned, and will probably live in Ipswich. His partnership with Mr Fitt, who is very popular in Norwich, has been so successful that the firm, in addition to the new Hippodrome at Ipswich, will shortly also take upon themselves the proprietorship of a well-known music hall at Colchester, and will run the three houses in conjunction with one another, thus being in a better position than otherwise to secure good artists by being able to offer them a three weeks' engagement at places within easy reach of London and of each other.

The Mayor and Mayoress were received on their arrival by Messrs Bostock and Fitt, and Mr Fitt's little daughter presented the Mayoress with a handsome bouquet. A platform had been erected and draped with bunting, while palms and plants were also used in decorating it. Here a large number of chairs had been placed, which were occupied by well-known residents of the borough.

Mr E. H. BOSTOCK said, in the course of his introductory speech, that he had had his eye on Ipswich for some little time. He made inquiries as to a site about nine months ago. After various negotiations, he and his partner, Mr Fitt, might, he thought, congratulate themselves on having secured a most suitable site from the Corporation. The class of performance they would give when the building was erected, he thought, would satisfy the requirements of all. It had proved so in Glasgow, where he had managed the Hippodrome for eight years, and had been, on leaving, presented with an elaborate testimonial, signed by the Lord Provost, and many leading citizens, and he thought that circumstance was some guarantee of the excellence of the entertainments he would provide. The people of Ipswich would, in fact, have the same class of entertainment as was given in the city of Norwich, and it was anticipated that the new building would be opened early in the new year. (Applause.)

Mr T. R. PARKINGTON apologised for the absence of Mr Frank Matcham, who, he said, was an extremely busy man. He had wired at the last moment to say that he would be unable to be present. Messrs Bostock and Fitt, he said, had put the work of designing the building into the hands of Mr Matcham, in order to ensure the safest and best-planned building that could be produced. Ipswich people would, no doubt, appreciate the fact that not only would they have beauty and comfort in the building, but wholesome and pure entertainment. (Applause.)

Mr F. W. FITT, the resident manager at Norwich, and a member of the Town Council in that town, said it was his duty to invite the Mayor to lay the foundation stone, but before that ceremony he would like to say how gratified Mr Bostock and he were with the support and encouragement they had received on all hands from the public. They hoped to make the Ipswich Hippodrome worthy of the name, and a place where a man might take his wife and children for their amusement. Mr Bostock had extensive business connections all over the world, and was in a position to get the best possible talent. He could assure them that the greatest care was exercised in selecting the "turns," and as regards the public in front, everything possible would be done to ensure their safety from fire, including the use of a fire-proof curtain. The artistes' dressing-rooms would be fitted with everything their convenience and comfort demanded, and, no doubt, in return, they would do their best for the entertainment of the public. (Applause.) There were grounds for general congratulation that the erection of that building was encouraging others to purchase sites in that street. When Ipswich people realised the wide extent of Mr Bostock's influence in the show world, they must feel that they had someone at the head who was in a position to provide the right sort of thing. (Applause.)

The MAYOR said that when he was asked to lay the foundation stone, he gave his ready consent, because he realised that good entertainment in a suitable building was of great importance to a community like Ipswich. He had the previous evening visited the Hippodrome at Norwich, and he could assure them that the entertainment was everything that could be wished. Nothing was shown or done or said to which anyone could have raised objections. (Applause.) He came away delighted, and he might say that the Mayor and ex-Mayor of Norwich and many leading residents were present—it being the opening of the new Hippodrome there—and that the Mayor made some highly complimentary remarks relative to Messrs Bostock and Fitt's enterprise. (Applause.)

Mrs PARKINGTON then asked the Mayor's acceptance of a silver-plated trowel, ivory mallet, square and level, the trowel being engraved as follows:—

Presented to the Mayor of Ipswich,
Alderman Fred Bennett, Esq.,
on behalf of the Builders,
by
Mrs T. R. Parkington, on the occasion of his laying the Foundation Stone of the New Hippodrome, St. Nicholas, Ipswich.
Proprietors:—
E. H. Bostock, Esq.,
F. W. Fitt, Esq.
Architects:—
Frank Matcham and Co., London.
Builders:—
T. Parkington, jun., Ipswich.
Oct. 25, 1904.

His Worship proceeded to lay the stone in due form, observing at the conclusion of the ceremony: "I declare this stone to be well and truly laid, and I hope it will mark the commencement of a healthy, popular, and profitable undertaking." (Applause.)

The band having played the National Anthem, on the proposition of Mr GUS. BOSTOCK, son of Mr E. H. Bostock, a hearty vote of thanks was accorded to the Mayor, three cheers being given for his Worship and three for the Mayoress. To the strains of "Rule Britannia," the company then separated. The carriage containing Mr Bostock, Mr and Mrs Fitt, and the latter's daughter, was drawn to the railway station on their departure by about twenty workmen, who took the horses out, and thus signalised their special interest in the day's proceedings. There was an interesting exhibition of ancient pottery, &c., found during the excavating of the foundations. These relics are, it is understood, to be presented to Ipswich Museum. —East Anglian Daily Times, Oct. 26, 1904.

A GRAND complimentary concert was given at the Town Hall, Rhyl, on the 20th inst. to Mr E. W. Parry, who during the season was the courteous secretary of the Queen's Palace. A high-class programme was appreciated by a large audience, and the following assisted:—Miss Annie Nelson, soprano; Madame Annie Grew, contralto; Mr Edward Lloyd, tenor; and Mr Tudor Owen, baritone. Mr Nelson Jackson's humorous sketches were greatly enjoyed. Mr Parry sang in excellent style. Mr Bryan Warhurst acted as accompanist.

AT the Knightstone Pavilion and Opera House, Weston-super-Mare, Mr F. H. De Quincey, Miss Sime Seruya, and a powerful répertoire company, under the direction of Mr Harold Reynor, opened on Monday in Richelieu. Mr F. H. De Quincey gave a convincing and artistic interpretation of the wily Cardinal; Mr Baliol Holloway made an excellent Chevalier De Mauprat; Louis XI. found an able expouent in Mr W. Henry Hargreaves; Mr Kendal Chalmers as Joseph was commendable and Mr Francis C. Coates was a praiseworthy Huguet, Mr Montague Lane being seen to advantage as Baradas. Mr Philip Gordon exhibited ability as Sieur De Beringhen; Miss Sime Seruya sustained the rôle of Julie De Mortemar with grace and pathos; Miss E. Stuart Innes's impersonation of François merited much eulogy, as did the Marion De Lorme of Miss Phyllis Noel. The Red Lamp and Othello were given during the week.

MESSRS DEWAR AND SONS are so friendly to members of the music hall profession that we are sure that all artistes will be delighted to hear of the news of an important British success at the World's Fair which should come as a sort of balm to the alarmist who would shake the Empire to its base with the wild cry of British industrial decadence. The refreshing piece of information was cabled to these shores last week. It announced the fact that Messrs Dewar and Sons, Limited, the famous old firm of distillers of Perth and London, had carried off the Grand Prix at the World's Fair for Scotch whiskies. This recognition of merit means the highest award of its class granted at the Exposition, and it has been secured by Messrs Dewar and Sons in the face of all competitors. The American Grand Prix comes to crown all the other honours gained by the firm who already hold over fifty medals awarded for the superiority of their whiskies.

AMONG the prominent producers of pantomime who have secured Geo. Le Brunn's topical duet "Do you mean it?" are Messrs Howard and Wyndham.

PRESENTATION TO FRED MILLIS.

Mr Fred W. Millis, the popular ventriloquist, who is shortly visiting Australia after an absence of fifteen years, was the recipient last Tuesday afternoon, at the offices of the M.H.A.R.A., of a handsome illuminated address from the officers and committee of the Music Hall Artistes' Railway Association, of which he is one of the original members, and also a vice-president. After Mr and Mrs Millis's health and success in his native land been proposed by Mr DOUGLAS WHITE, and seconded by Mr C. DOUGLAS STUART, Mr W. J. P. Monckton, one of the founders of the M.H.A.R.A., made the presentation.

In the course of his excellent address, Mr MONCKTON said:—My mind wanders back to the inception of this vast Association, to the dark days of struggling infancy in the dingy office in Red Lion-court, Fleet-street, when your astute secretary, Mr Stuart, poor Fred Lacey, and myself talked and talked over this great scheme. Think not that I am seeking to belittle those who have carried on this great work. That is far from my thoughts, but as a parent I have watched its growth and remarked the energy of the few devoted men who have stuck so manfully to their guns since that eventful first meeting held at the Hercules on Sunday, Nov. 8, 1896. It would be invidious of me, and impossible, to recapitulate here the names of those men; suffice it to say that when I look upon your committee to-day I still see before me the little band of earnest workers—those who were not daunted by the early struggles in the shadow of the dingy office in Fleet-street, but yet illumined by the shade of that most revered of men Oliver Goldsmith, for it was in Goldsmith's house, Wine Office-court, Fleet-street, that you commenced to make your organisation felt, and the first glorious news of the concession was received. Now of all that band of earnest workers I know of none who has shown such energy, such sympathy and devotion to the cause as has Mr Fred Millis, whom we are about to honour, and most deservedly. Mr Millis, I have been privileged, perhaps, more than many in the knowledge of the untiring devotion displayed by you to the objects of this Association, and can testify to the high esteem in which, speaking on behalf of the committee and myself, we hold you. You are going a long journey, back to your native land; the loss is ours, and we cannot help feeling somewhat envious of Australia, which claims our friend as its son. I have great pleasure in handing you this illuminated address on behalf of the officers and committee of the M.H.A.R.A. for your acceptance, with their fervent wish for your health and continued prosperity, and a speedy return to our shores and to us. With respect to my own connection with the Association and regard for Mr Millis, I would quote the words of the distinguished poet I mentioned previously—

> Eternal blessings crowd my earliest friend,
> And round his dwelling guardian saints attend.

Mr Millis, once more God-speed! and remember that your labours will still leave their imprint behind you in such an indelible manner that your past good work for the cause can never be effaced.

Mr MILLIS replied in a brief but feeling speech, in which he thanked Mr Monckton for all his kind sentiments towards himself, expressed his gratitude to all who had subscribed towards the very handsome address, and stated how much he regretted having to leave his friends and his work on the committee, but promised to renew his endeavours on his return to England to further the interests of the grand Association which he was so proud of being connected with, a society which had done so much good and been of such assistance to the less fortunate members of the profession.

Mr BOB HUTT proposed Mr Monckton's health, which Mr PAT CAREY seconded, and the proceedings terminated.

SOUTH LONDON.

An extremely laughable and smartly worked item in the current bill at this hall is the new pantomime sketch by the Brothers Onda entitled A Quiet Night. The scene represents a bar at an hotel and a sleeping apartment adjoining. A couple of eccentric looking individuals, whose intent is evidently burglary, enter the saloon and indulge in some amusing fooling, a pert barmaid being also prominent in the fun making. Then appears on the scene a gentleman whom the twain quickly decide to make their victim. When the two men have taken their departure in order to don other garments so that they will not be recognised, the traveller, all unconscious of the conspiracy which has been hatched, is shown by the lady into his sleeping apartment, and he endeavours to indulge in a mild flirtation with the fair attendant, but the lady does not encourage his advances. When she has retired and the weary traveller has made an attempt to settle down to slumber in his anything but comfortable bed, the burglars enter the saloon, and the comical appearance they present and their many amusing antics cause the wildest merriment. The smaller member of the duo is frequently requested by his companion to "keep quiet," and of course makes as as much turmoil as possible. The burglars purloin the bar fittings, and in fact everything they can lay their hands on, even attempting to squeeze chairs and tables into their "swag" bag. They next turn their attention to the sleeping apartment, where the unfortunate traveller has been spending a most uncomfortable time, the terrible noise caused by the intruders frightening him out of his wits. When they make their way into his apartment a general melée ensues, and the curtain falls amid abundant laughter and applause. The quartet responsible for this amusing piece of fooling work hard and with every success, the three brothers introducing many original and always effective devices for the creation of mirth, and at the same time proving themselves smart acrobats and tumblers. The lady as a lively bar attendant also takes an active share in the laughable performance. The novelty has been very well received at the South London.

AT this period of the year T. W. Connor, the well-known song writer, usually comes out with a special number, and has just sold to Mr George Brooks "There's another one out of work," which bids fair to excel the same comedian's "——And his day's work was done," Mr Connor's great success in last year's pantomimes. Messrs Francis, Day, and Hunter have acquired the new ditty.

TESTIMONIAL TO FRED W. MILLIS.

NEW NORWICH HIPPODROME.

The handsome building in St. Giles, in this city, hitherto known as the Norwich Opera House, was opened by Messrs E. H. Bostock and F. W. Fitt, on Monday evening, under very auspicious circumstances. In future it will be known as the Hippodrome. Notwithstanding that the proprietors did not take possession till late on Saturday night, long before the opening additional means of ingress and egress had been provided, the whole place was thoroughly cleaned, some new scenery was hung, and very marked improvements were made in the lighting and heating arrangements. The front of the house had been brilliantly illuminated, and on the inaugural night pennons were suspended across the semi-circle approach, adding to the animation of the scene. For fully an hour before the opening a huge crowd had congregated in front of the building patiently awaiting the opening. Every part of the building was filled to overflowing, and many had to be refused admission. Among the audience were the Mayor (Lieutenant-Colonel G. F. Buxton, V.C.) and Mrs Buxton and members of their family, the Sheriff (Lieutenant-Colonel Leathes Prior) and Mrs Prior and family, the Mayor and Mayoress of Ipswich, the Deputy-Mayor of Norwich (Lieutenant-Colonel J. R. Harvey, D.S.O.) and Mrs Harvey and their son.

As the clock struck seven the curtain was raised, and Miss Dorothy Clarke sang the opening verse of the National Anthem, accompanied by the band of the Royal Scots Greys under bandmaster Mr Frayling. Following this, the band with much ability rendered the selection "Reminiscences of Scotland," and at the conclusion were enthusiastically applauded. The Mayor, the Sheriff, and the Deputy Mayor then appeared on the stage and were introduced by Mr Fitt.

The MAYOR congratulated Mr Bostock and Mr Fitt most heartily upon the very great energy and enterprise they had shown in branching out as they had done. It was his hope that they might have a most successful time, and he could not help thinking that his hope would be realised. Since they had started to cater for public amusement in Norwich they had shown the utmost public spirit and kindness in from time to time assisting charitable movements, and that night they were going to help yet another good object by handing over the profits of the opening performance to the fund which had been raised for the purchasing of a site for the proposed new cavalry barracks. The present cavalry quarters were anything but comfortable for men or horses, and the citizens would feel very great pleasure when they had some better accommodation to offer to the cavalry regiments who were posted to Norwich. Over £2 500 was needed to defray the cost of the site, of which they had already got a good proportion subscribed by many kind friends in Norwich; and now that Messrs Bostock and Fitt had made them this most generous offer he considered the public ought to thank them most heartily for their great kindness and the patriotic spirit they had displayed. Their thanks were also due to Colonel Williams, and the officers of the Scots Greys, for allowing their band to perform on that occasion, and he also desired to thank the Mayor and Mayoress of Ipswich for their presence. In conclusion the Mayor expressed the hope that the Hippodrome in its new home would prove the greatest possible success. Messrs Bostock and Fitt had always provided amusement of a high standard of excellence, and they were deserving in every way of such good houses in the future as the one he was pleased to see they had on that occasion.

Mr FITT, who was greeted with enthusiastic cheers, craved indulgence for any little confusion that might have arisen in the seating of the audience. He and those concerned with him had hardly yet got used to the house, but that little defect would soon be overcome. He trusted that the citizens would rally to the support of the new undertaking. They were in possession of a building of which they might well be proud, and, whilst thanking the Norwich public for their past loyalty, he hoped they would rally round them so as to make the new undertaking a profitable one. He heartily thanked the Mayor and Mayoress, the Sheriff and Mrs Prior, the Deputy-Mayor, and the officers of the various regiments for their presence that evening.

The performance proper then commenced. Mdlle. Aladina was most successful with her performing cockatoos; and Mr Charles Milner as a comedian and dancer was very amusing. Helene and Emilon gave a clever gymnastic performance; Ronald Bagnall as a society entertainer was much applauded; Emma Don and company gave a unique show; Griff and his "satellite" Alpha were an amusing turn; Fred Herbert's topical song was very clever; Miss Dorothy Clarke's beautiful voice was heard to advantage in "Bluebell;" and Mons. De Henau showed dexterity as a painter with his feet. The Jackson Family fully deserved the applause given them. Although debarred at the first performance, Payne's Little Vagabonds as the Blue Coat Boys have been heartily appreciated. The two houses nightly performances will be continued, with a matinée on Saturday. Every praise is due to Messrs Bostock and Fitt for their enterprise, and warm thanks are to be accorded to Mrs Fitt and her able assistants for their kind and courteous attention. Captain Selby and his excellent band continue, and their efforts during the evening are much appreciated.

"MOTHS."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

Sir,—While thanking your critic for his kindly notice of my adaptation of Moths in your last week's issue, I beg to point out a slight error in his resumé of the plot. He says that I "make the villain triumphant in the end." This is incorrect. Zouroff meets his deserts as the appended lines clearly indicate. When Zouroff and Lord Jura exeunt to fight the duel, shots are heard off, the Servant then enters hurriedly, and the following dialogue ensues:—

DUCHESSE (to SERVANT)—Well, is Lord Jura dead?
SERVANT.—No, my lady, Prince Zouroff. Shot through the heart
DUCHESSE.—And, Lord Jura?
SERVANT—Mortally wounded, my lady. They are bringing him here.

Lord Jura is brought on, he has a dying speech, during which he "joins Correze's and Vera's hands," thus clearly showing to the audience my intention of a happy ending, as your critic suggests.

Yours faithfully, CHARLES FREEMAN.
32, Pretoria-avenue, Walthamstow.

THE copyrights, music plates, and stock of printed music of Messrs Jeffreys (Limited), of Wells-street, Oxford-street, with the furniture and good-will of the business, were disposed of at Messrs Puttick and Simpson's rooms, Leicester-square, on Thursday. High prices prevailed. Willem Vandervell's "Immer Wieder Gavotte" went to Messrs Bayley and Ferguson for £921 1s., and Willie Pope's fantasias "Irish Diamonds" to Messrs Leonard and Company for £193. The songs included "The Brook" (Dolores), £78; and F. Schira's "Signal" in E, D, and C, £95; while Verdi's opera, Il Trovatore, made £50. An aggregate of £3,000 was obtained.

IN Mr Justice Bucknill's court on Thursday Mrs Rahmel, a professional musician and teacher of singing, recovered £450 damages and costs from the London Road Car Company. The lady was in the March of 1903 a passenger in a Walham-green and Islington Road Car omnibus from King's-cross. She stopped the omnibus in order to alight, but the vehicle started off before Mrs Rahmel had had time to get down. Both she and the conductor fell, and she was severely injured.

AMERICAN VAUDEVILLE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

NEW YORK, Oct. 19.—Whatever may be said about the condition of things theatrical in this country there is no denying that the class of entertainment known as vaudeville is in a very healthy and flourishing state. New vaudeville theatres are springing up everywhere, and several big open air enterprises are maturing, to say nothing of the immense hippodrome now being built in New York, all of which will give employment to many artistes who come under the heading of vaudeville performers. When the hippodrome is completed New Yorkers will have an opportunity of seeing some of the big spectacles and ballets that are always to found in the list of London amusements. Consequently they will not be so far behind the old country in respect of attractions of this kind as they are at present. It always strikes a foreigner as strange that cosmopolitan New York, the second city of the world, has no music hall worthy of its size and the varied tastes of its population. No music hall, that is, as the term is understood in England and on the Continent. The conversion of the big amusement pile built by Oscar Hammerstein, and originally known as Olympia, into a temple of the drama, and the demolition of Koster and Bial's, the best imitation of a European music hall that New York ever saw, left an "aching void" which no one, so far, has had the temerity to try to fill. I say temerity advisedly, remembering Hammerstein's trouble with Olympia, and the vicissitudinous career of Koster and Bial's. But both of these places, being the first of their kind in New York, were far too big for the period. Regret at their passing, and the lack of such places in New York as the London Empire and Alhambra, is expressed by no means infrequently, and the future, methinks, will tell a different story. In the meantime the "continuous performance" houses, which are not in the same class at all, being by comparison about as exciting as the old-time "penny readings," nevertheless satisfy a large number of people. The Proctor houses are always crowded, and at Keith's there are not enough seats to accommodate all who want to see the show. Tony Pastor, at his popular little theatre in Fourteenth-street, continues to give the excellent entertainments that established his reputation as a variety manager many years ago. It is a long time since he appeared himself, and his songs, rendered as no one else in New York could render them, are missed. But having entertained the public for more than forty years, it can certainly be said of him that he is enjoying a well-earned rest.

MAY ROBSON is appearing at the vaudeville houses in a sketch called Cinders, which shows her in one of her amusing "slavey" characters. Odette Tyler, in a sketch entitled The Man, the Maid, and the Mouse, heads the bill at Proctor's Twenty-third-street Theatre. Edward Arden and Isabella Evesson have been playing the principal parts in a revival of E. H. Sothern's old success, Captain Lettarblair, at Proctor's Fifth-avenue Theatre. Loney Haskell, recently in London, was at Proctor's Harlem house last week, while William Harcourt, in A Dakota Widow; and Byron Douglass, in The Cowboy and the Lord, were among the leading attractions at Keith's. Isabelle Urquhart is appearing in a sketch at the variety theatres. Josephine Sabel sang at the West-end Theatre last Sunday night. Ted Marks continues to arrange the "sacred concerts" given every Sunday night at the American Theatre. Gustave Kerker has written an "operatic absurdity" called Very Much Grand Opera, which is being presented at the Proctor houses. Claude Gillingwater, recently with Mrs Leslie Carter, is to be seen at Keith's this week in an amusing comedietta entitled The Wrong Man.

M'INTYRE AND HEATH, who have been doing their droll darkey sketch, The Georgia Minstrels, at the vaudeville houses for more years than one can remember, will be seen next year in a new musical play called The Ham Tree. Cole and Johnson will compose the music, and the play will be produced by Klaw and Erlanger.

THE RUSSELL BROTHERS retired their Irish servant girl sketch in favour of a new playlet called The Female Detectives. The reports said that it pleased the gallery but "got on the nerves" of the society people in the stalls. It would be rash to predict that the servant girls will ever be superannuated. Audiences laugh at them as heartily now as they did more than twenty years ago.

HENRY CLAY BARNABEE, the veteran star of the operatic company known as the Bostonians, recently joined the ranks of the vaudevillians. He has been singing—shades of our ancestors!—"The man with the cork leg," and other humorous ditties of the same period. To speak paradoxically the song just mentioned is certainly old enough to be new to the majority.

MISS MABEL M'KINLEY, a niece of the late President, has been appearing in vaudeville. Now it is announced that she has written and will shortly produce a comic opera, the scenes of which are laid at the White House, and in the garden of the French Ambassador's residence in Washington, where an amusing meeting takes place between the Russian and Japanese ambassadors. During their quarrel Miss M'Kinley makes her entrance singing "Karamo," a Japanese lullaby.

GEORGE PRIMROSE, the minstrel, who dissolved his partnership with Lew Dockstader some time ago, and was said to have retired, has organised a new minstrel troupe, and with his pupils, the dancing Foley Twins, will soon be touring the country again. On the other hand, it is not unlikely that Dockstader, who is now sailing his airship "Tommyrot II." through the clouds every evening at the Herald-square Theatre, as part of his "minstrel show," will be doing his monologue at the vaudeville houses once more in the near future. Mr M. S. Bentham having offered him a long engagement. Mr Bentham has arranged for Mr Charles Warner's appearance at the Orpheum Music Hall, in Brooklyn, next January, in a condensed version of Drink.

MR FRED WRIGHT, JUN., introduced a trick into The Schoolgirl at Daly's Theatre the other evening which has served to remind us once more that "there's nothing new under the sun." Miss Anna Held claimed proprietory rights in the trick, but it is now said to be the property of Torcat, who fulfilled an engagement at Hammerstein's some time ago. The performer makes use of a papier maché figure, which it carried in front, and a basket, which appears to be upon the back of the figure, apparently holds the performer. Another authority has it that the trick was introduced here over thirty years ago by an Englishman named Fernando Fleury.

MISS BLANCHE RING recently sang "Bedelia" before an audience of fifteen thousand people at Kansas City, Missouri. She was accompanied by Sousa's band, and the rendering of this popular ditty under such unusual conditions aroused great enthusiasm.

WE hear of another "lady bass" in the person of the fascinating Miss Kate Rooney, who is widely known in Australia as a famous athlete, champion swimmer, and a charming vocalist. She belongs to the Ladies' Australian Vocal Quartet, who will appear shortly at the Empire, under the direction of Mrs Hugh J. Ward, the wife of the popular dancer and pantomime comedian. Miss Rooney can sing down to B natural. Miss Sybil Arundale, the charming representative of Lady Molly Martingale at Terry's, and now the Nanoya of The Cingalee at Daly's, sings down to E flat every evening.

MISS AGNES HAZEL, who has been so very successful in London recently, has bought a descriptive love song from Mills and Scott, the authors of her ditty, "Mabel and Joe." Miss Hazel leaves town on Monday next until Christmas. She commences her tour at Hastings.

BLANCHE AND DIACOFF, Mokana, the Musical Ashbeys, and the Sisters Burgess arrived safe in Bombay on Wednesday, the 19th inst., by the Anchor Liner Persia. All are well, and had a warm but uneventful voyage. They wish to be remembered to their numerous professional friends at home.

RUSSELL AND ROPER, who have been deputising for Mr Wilkie Bard, have made a big hit at the Hackney Empire this week in their vocal speciality, The Opera-singer and the Sandwichman, being recalled three times at each performance.

MISS DAISY DE ROY will do her utmost to make her two pantomimes, Whittington and Sinbad, the best on tour. Her Sinbad has already run two seasons, and is booked for a third, a fact that speaks volumes in favour of its drawing powers. This year it will be under the entire supervision of Mr Carl Ostend, Miss De Roy's indefatigable manager. Her Dick Whittington will be under her own personal supervision, and both are being magnificently costumed.

SAMUEL'S Exhibition Palace, Dublin, will reopen in a few days. The hall has been enlarged and redecorated, a magnificent new iron staircase has been erected, a capable, efficient, and well-known manager has been engaged, and another first-class place of amusement has been added to the well-known resorts already doing well in Dublin.

MISS ALEXANDRA DAGMAR had the honour of opening the New Coliseum, Brighton, on Monday afternoon, when she sang the National Anthem to a large audience.

ADA, ZEBRA, AND VORA, the celebrated nonpariel trio, have been presenting most successfully on the Brill and Graydon Tour several new items, making their successful show more of a novelty than ever.

AMID a scene of considerable excitement on Friday evening, Oct. 21, Miss Sarah Marks was declared the winner of the young women's singing competition at the Cambridge. She is only seventeen, and was awarded the sum of £5 and a week's engagement at the hall. She chose the popular "Sammy" as her test piece.

MR GEORGE NEWBURN, the popular mimic, concludes to-night a highly successful London season, and commences the Moss circuit on Monday at Liverpool. He will return to the London halls next March.

A COPY OF "THE ERA" will be forwarded to any address in the United Kingdom for six stamps

Faulkner Cox as Murty O'Flynn is deserving of considerable praise; Mr Walter T. Clifford scores as Francis Levison; Mr M. Talbot is well placed as Lord Mountsevern; and Mr James Willoughby makes the most of Richard Hare. Barbara Hare is in the capable hands of Miss Helen Stewart; Miss B. French Stewart depicts the part of Cornelia Carlyle with good effect.

BOROUGH THEATRE OF VARIETIES.—Proprietor and Manager, Mr Arthur Jefferson.—An attractive turn here is Achmed Ibrahim's Bedouin Arabs, Arabian tumblers and pyramid builders, who are deservedly well applauded. Mdlle. De Vena, in her clever juggling act, has made a great hit; Mdlle. Lucretia, comedienne and dancer, is smart; Messrs Clan and Forbes, in their feats of strength, are seen to advantage; the Countlees, duettists, meet with a cordial reception; Mr Mike Craig and dog, in their comedy act, are received with much favour; and Mr Abe Aubrey, gymnast, is good. OLDHAM.

EMPIRE.—Proprietors, Oldham Theatres, Limited; Manager, Mr Ernest Dottridge; Acting-Manager, Mr Hulme.—Mr Walter Melville's company is here in a drama of exceptional merit entitled A Disgrace to Her Sex. Miss Grace Heywood plays Hilda Valley with much ability; Mr Augustine Knight as Jules Delarnet renders his part in a pleasing manner; Mr Phil Harper as Jack Dawes and Miss Nellie Lucas as Mildred Carrington, the heroine, give a clever rendering of their respective characters; Mr David G. Noble as Arnold Travers and Miss Winnie Tempest as Mabel Valley are both very good; Mr Eugene Santley scores a success as David Carrington; Mr Arthur Bryon does well as Barnaby Mugg; and Miss Madge Yates as Bella Mugg ably sustains the humour of the play.

ROYAL.—Proprietors, Oldham Theatres, Limited; Manager, Mr Ernest Dottridge; Acting-Manager, Mr George Knowles.—The patrons of this popular house are favoured this week with another excellent programme. Kelly and Gillette were billed to appear, but, owing to an accident to one of the partners, a substitute was found in the Troupe of Ando Japs, equilibrists (five in number), who gave an excellent performance. Percy Farrimond, the singing collier, was successful in his rendering of "Ora Pro Nobis;" Terry and Bentley provide plenty of amusement; Morny Cash, the popular comedian, was well received; T. W. Barrett, comedian, was a success; Gertrella, who was cleverly assisted in an illuminated scene, In Cupid's Garden, displayed refined talent; Carlo Bianchi was responsible for a wonderful performance of foot balancing; Carrie Laurie's Juveniles in Kindergarten are successful; Carlotta, lady vocalist, was well received for her excellent rendering of "Blue Bell" and "The Gambling Man."

GAIETY.—Proprietors, Oldham Theatres, Limited; Manager, Mr E. J. Dexter.—The popularity of this house was manifested on Monday evening by two crowded audiences. Pielit, the jail breaker and handcuff king, mystifies his audience by his marvellous performance; Mitzi is successful as a Japanese juggler; Robert Grieve, ventriloquist, is very amusing; Sisters Warner, duettists and dancers, are greatly appreciated; George Bendon, the white coon, is very effective; and Mdlle. Melita gives a wonderful performance of clog dancing.

OXFORD.

NEW THEATRE.—Managing Director, Mr Thomas Lucas, J.P.; Acting-Manager, Mr C. C. Dorrill.—There was no mistaking the heartiness of the welcome extended to Messrs Addison Bright and Walter Maxwell's company by a full house on Monday in Barrie's comedy, Little Mary. Exquisitely performed by a really good company, the play quite took the fancy of the house. Mr Arthur Holmes-Gore gave a delightfully finished and easy performance of the Earl of Carlton; Mr A. Kightley was uncommonly good in the rather ungrateful part of his son; Mr George Mudie's artistic and polished rendering of Sir Jennings Pyke was keenly appreciated; Mr A. W. Baskcomb cleverly doubled the parts of Terence Reilly and the Earl of Plumleigh; Miss Elspeth Dudgeon was clever and convincing as the Countess of Plumleigh; Miss Evelyn Neilida made an interesting Lady Milly; Miss Gladys Rutter was a capital Eleanor Gray; and Miss Christine Silver won all hearts by her truly artistic and artless performance of Moira. Little Mary was preceded by a clever curtain-raiser, The Bugle Call, which was well played.

EMPIRE THEATRE.—Lessee and Manager, Mr Albany Ward; Acting-Manager, Mr H. G. P. Wells.—Messrs W. T. Elworthy and J. Buckley's company is occupying these boards this week with A Bunch of Violets. The company is generally excellent and the acting is of a high order. The brunt of the acting falls on Mr Leonard Pagden as Sir Philip Marchant, and he sustains the part with marked success. In the absence of Mr J. B. Montague (indisposed) the part of Bertie White is ably depicted by Mr A. Loftus; Mr Harrison Brockbank submits a capital impersonation of Captain Lovebury; Mr Albert Weston is excellent in the character of Mons. Bonser, his clever dancing being a feature of the production; Miss Gladys Elvey is a charming and artistic representative of the title-part; and Miss Hilda Blanche as Brenda Louth gives a very creditable rendering of the rôle.

Miss Grace Chalmers is much applauded for her capital delineation of Glory Quayle. Mr Harry Scott gives a forcible reading of John Storm. Mr Stanley Radcliffe's Father Lamplugh is impressive. Mr Charles B. Bedells does exceedingly well as Lord Robert Ure, as also does Mr Jackson Wilcox as Horatio Drake. Mr Charles E. Dering is excellent as Archdeacon Wealthy, and Miss Clara Nicholls gives a most effective portrayal of Mrs Callender.

Carnell.—Prof. Inman Hocking, hypnotist, electrician, and scientist, heads the bill here this week, and is well received. SOUTH SHIELDS.

THEATRE ROYAL.—Lessees and Managers, Messrs J. and F. Coulson.—Messrs Carson and Granville presented on Monday their latest production A Modern Adventuress. The general manager, Mr Leonard Aardale, characteristically and cleverly essays the part of the noble Pietro Donelli. The fiendish and unwomanly Violet Meredith is represented by Miss Beatrice M. Anderson, who, being favoured by a handsome stage presence, submits a telling portrayal. Miss Mimi Fisher is responsible for much of the lighter vein as Sally Hodges.

EMPIRE PALACE THEATRE. — Proprietor, Mr Richard Thornton; General Manager, Mr Frank Allen; Resident Manager, Mr Geo. F. Thompson.—The principal turn is a wonderful sensational cycling display of whirling the whirl. The Tom Davies Trio whirl round their miniature track at amazing speed. The track is elevated in mid-air, during which the cyclists continue their performance. A local amateur competition is open, a gold medallion forming the first prize. Pat Rafferty upholds his reputation as an Irish comedian; the Bioscope submits an interesting film, vividly depicting a pathetic temperance story entitled "The Stowaway;" Nello is a lady contortionist of more than average ability; the Wedburns are entertaining comedians and patterers; and the American Musical Millionaires, Ford and Hanson, are popular here. Juan and M Que are amusing knockabouts. Other capable turns are furnished by the Sisters Cora, duettists and dancers; and Chas. Stevens, character vocalist.

TIVOLI. — Proprietors, Councillor J. K. Hall and Mr Jos. Sweeney.—Crowded houses at both performances fully compensated the management in providing another excellent programme, which this week includes the Three Seabornes, who give an exceptionally smart equilibristic entertainment. The Wallys display an aptness for juggling which secures for them many plaudits. The original candy man, Percy Curry, is one of the few exponents of Tyneside dialect, and his ability is deservedly appreciated. George Collins is a funny comedian, and Dombey and Son, comedians, appear successfully. Reed and Lerne, novel comedians, are animated, and Florence Schuberth, comedienne, and Harry Tomlinson, vocal comedian, also merit distinction.

SPENNYMOOR.

CAMBRIDGE THEATRE. —Lessee, Mr Harding Thomas; Resident Manager, Mr Herbert Vere.—Mr Alfred B. Cross and company are here this week with The Manxman. Although not new to Spennymoor playgoers the piece was witnessed with keen delight by Monday night's audience. Pete is cleverly handled by Mr Cross; Philip Christian provides Mr Richard Vane with plenty of opportunities for showing his skill as an actor of which he avails himself fully; and Miss Minnie Watersford appears to great advantage as Kitty. Mr Hilton Frances is good in the rôle of Cæsar Cregeen and Miss Muriel Gray makes an exceedingly attractive Miss Christian. Nancy is well played by Miss Rosie Kearns. Ross Christian finds in Mr Edward M'Lean an admirable exponent, and Monty Missit and the Professor are good in the hands of Mr Edward Cartell and Mr Douglas Cottell. The scenery is exceedingly pretty.

Miss Hilda Stericker is a charming Mrs Smith; Miss Rue Daryll as Rose Walton displays ability; Miss Keith Lytton and Miss Ethel Russell as Mrs Billetdoux and Miss Smith give capital character studies; and the Lavinia portrayed by Miss Constance Stevens creates much amusement. Ben Greet's No. 1 company in The Eternal City is announced for the latter part of the week.

STALYBRIDGE.

GRAND THEATRE.—Lessee and Manager, Mr Arthur Carlton; Resident-Manager, Mr H. L. Rooke. —This week we have a return visit from Mr Leslie Vyner's company in The Lightning's Flash, which includes many old favourites, foremost being Mr Leonard Robson and Mr Harry Vernon. They are again very successful in their respective rôles of Stephen Merrick and Toby Gander. Messrs Sidney Kearns and Courtney Robinson do well as the villains, and the dancing and singing of Miss Dora Condor is pleasing. Miss F. Russel Spiers as Stephen's wife wins sympathy. The scenery is particularly good, especially that of the last act.

STOCKPORT.

NEW THEATRE ROYAL.—Sole Owner and Manager, Mr Charles Revill; Acting-Manager, Mr Wm. Revill.—Mr Cecil Barth's company, in An Actor's Romance, has been cordially greeted here this week, the representations being capitally given, and the many exciting and interesting situations heartily applauded. Mr Guy Hastings acts most ably as Harold Devonport, and Mr Ernest Ruston gives a capital impersonation of Robert Livingstone. Mr E. H. Dobell makes a pleasing Charlie Cummings, and Mr Carl Lyle is very good as Ikey Isaacs. Miss Constance Elgin as Florence acts with great power and effect, whilst Miss Bertha Northam was exceedingly pleasing as Louise Davenport.

Chappel's Captain Holcroft is clever; Mr Lionel Sullivan's Farmer Herrick is effective; Mr Walter Wilson's Richard Belton is a good character study; so also is the Sergeant Searle of Mr Leon Ainscliffe. Much fun is caused by Mr Cecil Clayton's Joe Buzzard and Miss Anna Beaumont's Mrs Buzzard. The premier position is held by Miss Billie Barlow, who scores a brilliant success in her admirably rendered songs. The Creo Brothers, in an acrobatic turn, are without doubt the best turn in their line of business yet seen here; Mr J. H. Milburn, who is much appreciated, causes roars of laughter in his facial entertainment; Aga, the flying maiden, contributes a truly wonderful show; Ferris and Farnley are a funny pair, their patter being very amusing; Mabelle May, who dances admirably, is much appreciated; Chris Masters is a descriptive vocalist of merit; and Harry Sheldon sings two good songs in a smart manner. Sir Henry Irving commenced a farewell visit on Thursday in The Merchant of Venice, and was received with most demonstrative enthusiasm.

ROYAL, LIMITED.—Managing-Director, Mr Chas. E. Machin; General Manager, Mr Percival Craig.—Messrs Fred Darcy and F. J. Little's company in The Executioner's Daughter occupies the boards here this week. Mr E. M. Hamilton as Monsieur Roche plays in a convincing style, and Felix Marius, the villain, is thoroughly realised by Mr Geo. Beverley. Miss Dorothy Riddell makes a capital heroine as Annette, and Mr W. H. Sharpe's Kretch is excellent. Mr Will Howard as Paul Rovel, Mr E. W. Avery as Tom Holmes, and Miss May Rosine as Sally are worthy of special mention.

PALACE THEATRE OF VARIETIES, LIMITED.—Managing-Directors, Messrs Livermore Bros.; Acting-Manager, Mr George V. Wybrow; Secretary and Treasurer, Mr Alfred Brown.—Mr George Leyton, actor-vocalist, heads the bill here this week. Donaldson Bros., Ardel, and company cause roars of laughter in their zoological comedy. An amusing turn is submitted by Spry and Austin, the vaudeville artists. Will Dalton, Bob Baxter, Alma Obrey, comedienne; the Sisters Dacre, duettists; and the Tally Ho Trio also contribute.

SUTTON-IN-ASHFIELD.

NEW KING'S THEATRE.—Proprietors, The Sutton Theatre Syndicate; Managing Director, Captain Clayton.—Messrs Paumier and Howard's Under the Russian Flag company is here this week, and excellent business is being done. The cast is a particulary strong one. Mr Walter Howard's stage presence and voice seem specially suited in the part of Captain Demetrius, and he gives a most finished performance. Mr George Arthur as Michael and Mr F. W. Freeman as Ivan have excellent chances, of which each makes the most. The Vera Vassiloff of Miss Ada Champion shows great depth of feeling and passion; Miss Ellen Snow has a difficult part in Luka Marischia, which she interprets in fine style; and as Ogarita, an opera dancer, Miss Agnes Howard causes much merriment.

SWANSEA.

GRAND THEATRE.—Proprietors, Messrs David Allen and Sons; Lessee and Manager, Mr Frank Boyce; Acting-Manager, Mr Walter Bellian.—Sapho has been the attraction at this house during the week, interpreted by Miss Olga Nethersole's company, and an admirable interpretation it has been. Of course, the two principal figures that stand out so prominently in the play—Fanny Le Grand (Sapho) and Jean—have by far the largest share of the work, and both characters are excellently played by Miss Cecil Cromwell and Mr Arthur Royston respectively. Mr Hodgson Taylor was particularly good as Flamant, and able support was given by Mr Harry Dodd (Uncle Césaire), Mr Arthur Poole (Déchélette), Mr James Kenning (Hettema), Mr Frank Melrose (Caoudal), and Miss Jessie Melville (Madame Hettema).

NEW STAR.—Lessee and Manager, Mr T. Morton Powell; Acting-Manager, Mr William Coutts.—The attraction at this house during the week has been Miss Marie Menzies' drama, A Rogue's Daughter, played by her own company.

NEW EMPIRE.—Managing-Director, Mr Oswald Stoll; Acting-Manager, Mr Albert Mitchell.—The programme here includes the following:—Tina Clementa, with her horse and troupe of performing dogs, which are remarkably well trained; Bert Byrne, a good comedian; Scottish Meisters, the Highland comedy quartet of male vocalists; Lizzie Valrose, a pleasing comedienne; the American Bioscope, with a series of excellent views; Walter Stanley, a capital comedian; Alcide Capitaine, gymnast—a remarkably clever turn; Arthur Melrose, word-whistling comedian, who is greatly appreciated; and Binns and Binns, eccentric instrumentalists, who win hearty applause.

SWINDON.

QUEEN'S THEATRE.—Sole Lessee and Personal Manager, Mr Alfred Manners.—That the first visit of that pretty musical play, The Cherry Girl, to this town had been anticipated with the keenest interest was evidenced by the intense enthusiasm of the crowded audience on Monday. The company is Mr C. Lubbock's, under the business management of Mr J. H. Kidger. A conspicuous feature of this production was undoubtedly the staging and scenery. It would be difficult to praise too highly Miss Elsie Molloy's charming performance as the Queen. Miss Dorothy Frostick's work as Mdlle. Bas Pas was very interesting and captivating, and Miss Katie May as Pansy achieved a pleasing success. Miss Decima Brooke, a little artiste of great promise, undertook with rare skill and earnestness the part of Dimples, all her efforts being deservedly applauded and redemanded. Mr H. Herbert as Moonshine kept the house in excellent spirits with capital songs and genuine fun, while Mr C. St. John Medley as Starlight, and later as the Squire, contributed greatly to the success of the piece with his effective work. Mr Charles Seymour as Bow and Mr F. De Lane as Scrape provoked much laughter with their quaint antics, and Masters Harry Williams and J. Saxon merit a good word for their efforts in their respective parts. The delightful ballets undertaken by Miss Lottie Stone's graceful troupe of dancers and the Four Wisterias are enthusiastically received, and the large chorus and augmented orchestra are ably conducted by Mr C. Locknane.

WAKEFIELD.

ROYAL OPERA HOUSE.—Proprietors, Sherwood and Co.—Mr Ernest Marris's company in the musical comedy The Dandy Doctor is again paying a visit here. An abundance of humour is extracted from the part of Mr Brown, the millionaire, by Mr James Salter; Mr James Danvers makes a great hit as Colonel Pendred; Mr Walter Nugent is able as Arthur Vandyke; and Mr W. N. Gilmore appears with success as Bertie Bolinbroke. Miss Lizzie Primmer is admirable as Ivy Pendred; Miss Florence Smithers is excellent as Jane, the servant; and Miss Nora Melton is well suited as Buttons. Some clever dances are given by the Dandy Belles. Misses Allen, Evelyn, and Wells, and Mr Ben Rowe and Miss Holden give a smart exposition of the cake-walk. Mr James Danvers, assisted by Miss Otto, contributes a speciality turn entitled "Paderewski Up to Date," which is applauded.

HIPPODROME.—Proprietors, the Wakefield Hippodrome Company, Limited; Manager, Mr D. G. Mooney.—Collins and Rice are successful in a comedy act; Miss Patty Yole, comedian, dances well; the Percys are well received in a comedy turn; Marcus Boyle, comedian, is highly appreciated; and Mr Ernie Leech, ventriloquist; Mr Rubin Hill, comedian; and Mdlle. Henriette, 'celloist, also appears. The Elliotts and the Savonas are loudly applauded for their marvellous cycling and musical performances.

WREXHAM.

EMPIRE MUSIC HALL.—Proprietor, Mr J. J. Scott; Manager, Mr Herbert Nicholls.—This week an excellent all-round company has performed at this hall before good houses. Rita and Roma, versatile vaudeville entertainers, gained hosts of admirers; Mr Fred Alberto, a quaint Irish-American comedian and dancer, took well; and WALLSEND.

THEATRE ROYAL.—Owners, the Wallsend Theatre Company; Manager, Mr T. Richardson.—Miss Gladys Silvester and Mr Fletcher Sansome's company is appearing here this week in the musical comedy Cissy. Mr Harry C. Lovell undertakes the part of Victor Carleton, and acquits himself in excellent style; Gilbert Temple is ably portrayed by Mr G. E Butt; and as Titus Thomas Mr F. Sansome causes considerable amusement. Miss Annie Stevenson is pleasing as Olive Temple, and as Cissie Vere Miss Florence Barnes is excellent. Some clever dancing is done by Miss Dora Weber, Miss Amy Valerie, Miss Amy Isabel, and Miss Bertha Kirk.

WALSALL.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Proprietors, the Walsall Theatres Co., Limited; General Manager and Secretary, Mr W. H. Westwood.—Florodora was presented here on Monday by Mr Tom B. Davis's company, under the direction of Mr Wentworth Croke. Mr Daly Cooper as Anthony Tweedlepunch was the very essence of fun; Miss Ethel Dunbar invested Dolores with charm, and sang her solos with skill and sweetness; Mr Cyril Dane as Frank Abercoed was extremely effective; as Cyrus W. Gilfain Mr C. J. Barber was dryly humorous; and the Arthur Donegal of Mr Derick C. Knowles was excellent. Miss Rene Steadman as Lady Holyrood acted with daintiness and grace; and Miss Daisy Byford made a charming Angela Gilfain.

GRAND THEATRE, LIMITED.—General Manager and Secretary, Mr W. H. Westwood.—Mr William Bourne's company is here with When Darkness Falls, in which Mr Charles Boult gives an excellent rendering of Capt. Harold Montrevor. Mr Frank Liston is well placed as the Rev. Arthur Graham. Mr Ellis J. Preston makes a powerful James Woodruffe, and Miss Amy Vennimore is impressive as Mrs Woodruffe. Miss Maud Buchanan is a pathetic Helen Montrevor; the two street waifs are charmingly portrayed by Miss Lydia Hart and Miss Alys Eden; and the humorous element is well provided by Miss Emmeline Glover as Jenny and Mr Will Clement as Mike Kavanagh.

WALTHAMSTOW.

KING'S THEATRE.—The patrons of the King's are not slow to appreciate a good thing when they get it, and Mr W. T. M'Clellan's interesting and exciting play, A Woman Adrift, is drawing capital business this week. The company engaged in the representation is that of Mr Sanderson Moffat, and it may be said that every member works loyally to secure success. In the prologue Mr St John Bucher is a handsome and distinguished Sir John Ingleby. Lady Ingleby is played with spirit by Miss Patey Trounsell, the somewhat vinegarish aspect of the lady who despises the quietness of country life being well expressed. Little May Tickell is a pretty boy as Rupert, and speaks her lines with distinctness. A great favourite with the audience is Mr Charles Wilson, whose young coster, Jibbs, is redolent of the Old Kent-road. Miss Phyllis Hamilton enacts the wronged Cora Leigh with great force, while her pathos is never intrusive. Messrs Watson Hume, P. Neston, and Fred J. Edwards are duly bucolic as Sir John's tenants. In the play proper most of these artistes appear, after a supposed lapse of five years, with equal effect, and Mr Sanderson Moffat adds a picturesque rendering of the dual rôle of the two brothers, Ferdinand and Don Leo Castro. The remaining characters are all efficiently filled by Messrs W. A Mackersay, W. B. Somerville, Ainsley Linton, S. Williams, and Norman M'Kinnell, Miss Cissie Bell and Miss Maude Merrick. The piece is admirably staged.

WARRINGTON.

ROYAL COURT.—Proprietors, Messrs W. Johnson and J. Potter; General Manager, Mr J. Potter.—Though Two Little Vagabonds has been seen here several times it still retains its hold on lovers of the Thespian art; and a goodly crowd gave Hardie and Von Leer's company a welcome greeting on Monday. In the title-rôles Misses May Hart (Dick) and Dorothy Marsdin (Wally) submitted excellent studies; Mr J. W. Henson was well placed as George Thornton; and as Marion Thornton Miss Laura Hansen scored a big success.

THEATRE ROYAL.—Proprietors, Messrs W. Johnson and J. Potter; General Manager, Mr J. Potter; Director of Amusements, Mr F. Willmot.—Good business is again the order here, and Atlas and Vulcana, always a welcome turn here, have again scored a phenomenal success. Charles R. White is one of the best comedians seen here for many a long day. Other attractions are Tom Owen, comedian; Lily Turner, vocalist; Mollie Doon, comedienne; Wilfred, a contortionist; Vulcana, in classic poses, and J. L. Wilsker's bioscope, with new pictures.

WEDNESBURY.

THEATRE ROYAL.—Lessee, Mr Harry Battersby; Manager, Mr W. J. Cranston.—Messrs Harry Mayhew and Charles Herrick's London company in The Triumph of Truth is successful here this week. Mr Edward Lewis as Captain Jack Eversleigh and Mr J. A. Keogh as Sir Charles Eversleigh are both worthy of special mention; the Count Raoul D'Orville is ably presented by Mr T. Lockwood; a clever interpretation of Pierre Choppard is presented by Mr Frank Radcliffe; Mr Charles Herrick as Vitto Mascagni is very good. A word of praise is due to Miss Rosabel Dodd for her able embodiment of Blanch De Croix; Miss Lilian Ramsdale gives a characteristic portrayal of Coralie; as Katie Bright Miss Lily Rogers is well suited; Miss Marie Auckland is warmly applauded in the rôle of Violet Austruther; and Miss Nellie Kenneth does well as Little Lena.

WEST HARTLEPOOL.

GRAND.—General Manager (for Mrs Weldon Watts), Mr Sidney Bacon; Resident Manager, Mr Fred Conneaux.—The Silver King, ever welcome and appreciated, is being presented by G. M. Polini and Austin Melford's company. The cast is an extensive one, and includes the names of some clever artistes, prominent among which are Mr Lauderdale Maitland, and Miss Lilian Bethell, who, as Wilfred and Nellie Denver are to be congratulated upon the capable and finished style in which the respective characters are displayed. Mr Edward J. George, who has been so often and so long associated with the rôle of Daniel Jakes, is just as good as ever in the part. Cissy and Ned have charming exponents in Miss Violet St. Clair and Master Jack Evan. Mr W. V. Garrod, in realistic style plays the rôle of Captain Herbert Skinner, and a creditable piece of acting is done by Mr Byron Pedley as Samuel Baxter.

PALACE.—Director-General, Mr Frank Macnaghten.—A bill exceptional for its all-round strength is headed this week by Lady Mansel and her clever troupe of juvenile vocalists, whose singing and dancing give great satisfaction. The dramatic episode, V.C, played by Charles Cunningham and company, is one of the prettiest and best playlets that have been done here. Johnny Holland and company remain another week, and are doing a farcical absurdity entitled The Boat-builder. Valoni's clever juggling feats introduce some exceptionally well-trained pigeons. The Villions create astonishment with their wonderful cycling tricks, an exceptionally clever turn being that of the lady, who accomplishes twenty-five pirouette somersaults in succession. Millie Denham, burlesque artiste; Fyne and Hurley, in their sketch, The Coster and the Dude; and the Three Dagmars, in their acrobatic speciality act, all strong numbers, complete the bill.

WEST STANLEY.

THEATRE ROYAL, LIMITED.—Managing-Director, Mr Mark H. Linden.—Mr C. Finch-Hatton's company is paying a visit here with When London Sleeps. Mr E. S. Trelawny is an able Captain Rodney Haynes, and Mr Tom Ronald a manly David Engleheart. The comedy element is well sustained by Mr Darcy Kelway as Sammy Blyth and Mr Chas. Digby as Bertie Broomhead. Miss Ella Sennett is an admirable Queenie Carruthers, and as Hilda Carrode Miss Grace Baring is most successful.

VICTORIA THEATRE.—Proprietor, Mr T. C. Rawes; Acting-Manager, Mr David Williams.—The Sporting Girl, played by Miss Maggie Stanton and Mr G. Perry's company, is here this week.

WIDNES.

ALEXANDRA THEATRE.—Proprietor, Mr James Kiddie; Secretary and Manager, Mr T. Swinton.—Miss Emma Litchfield's company in A London Actress opened here on Monday. Mr Stuart Cleveland in the character of Sergt.-Major Crawford makes a manly and impressive hero, while Mr Charles E. Leicester is well suited in the part of Lieut. Kingston. Mr Fred Tenaur submits a characteristic representation of the money-lending Jew, and Mr Sam Wilford provides plenty of comedy and sings some good songs in the rôle of Pat Maloney. Miss Emma Litchfield gives a powerful representation of Hilda Mannering and Miss Alice Capel displays cleverness in the part of Phyliss Crawford.

WIGAN.

ROYAL COURT THEATRE.—Proprietors, the Wigan Entertainments Company; Managing-Director, Mr John Worswick.—Miss Ida Molesworth and Mr Mark Blow's company has presented here A Sailor's Sweetheart. Mr Alfred Goddard ably undertakes the part of Lieutenant Charles Clive, and the character of Grace Mayland is sympathetically acted by Miss Adah Barton. The other parts are in capable hands.

GRAND THEATRE AND HIPPODROME.—Proprietors, the Wigan Entertainments Company; Managing-Director, Mr J. Worswick.—This week's programme includes Fred Karno's comedians in their latest comedy act entitled Saturday to Monday. Charles Morritt, illusionist, shows many bewildering tricks, and Miss Nellie Wick performs each evening the feat of shaving ten men in less than fifteen minutes, one-handed, two-handed, and blindfolded. Master George, boy vocalist; Fred Keeton, comedian; Amber Austa, comedienne; and Will E. Haines, vocal comedian, are up to date in their own particular business, while Gladys White, vocalist, is well received.

EMPIRE MUSIC HALL.—Manager, Mr W. Birchall.—The Grovinis (five), drawing-room acrobats, and Gilbert Payne, comedian and cornet soloist, are exceedingly good. E. J. Wilkes and Dan Noble, comedians; Miss Renee Walon, comedienne; Kay, American automaton; Minnie and Harry, comedy ring performers; and Pattie Fairley, ballad vocalist, complete an enjoyable programme.

WORCESTER.

THEATRE ROYAL.—Lessee, Mr Arthur Carlton; Manager, Mr Louis Karpe.—This week Mr Wm Greet's company is paying a return visit here with The Lady Slavey. The title-rôle on Monday was capitally taken by Miss Addie Leonard, whose songs and imitations and general vivacity displayed versatility of a high order. Mr Frank Sherlock as the Sheriff's Officer provided a good deal of fun, and Mr Allen Morris as the millionaire was also very successful.

WOLVERHAMPTON.

GRAND THEATRE.—Lessees and Managers, Mr E. H. Bull and Mr Milton Bode; Acting-Manager, Mr Percy Percival.—One of the most important and attractive engagements at this house for some time has been that of Miss Ellen Terry and company, who are appearing here this week. The first item in an interesting programme was Much Ado About Nothing, which was produced on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings. The character of Beatrice was, of course, essayed by Miss Terry, whose delineation of the part was most artistic, her charming acting calling forth repeated acknowledgments after each act, and particularly at the conclusion of the play, when she had to bow again and again. Mr Matheson Lang is an artist of great ability, and his interpretation of the part of Benedick was both skilful and diversifying; Mr E. Harcourt Williams gave an excellent account of himself as Claudio; Mr Charles Thursby did admirably as Don Pedro; Mr George Fitzgerald played very effectively as Leonato; and Mr T. A. Shannon was efficient as Don John. Praiseworthy assistance was also rendered by Mr John Willes as Dogberry, Mr J. S Hamilton as Antonio, Mr Alfred Bucklaw as Balthazar, and Mr Halliwell Hobbes as Friar Francis; while the Hero of Miss Hutin Britton was capable and pleasing. The staging was excellent. During the week The Merchant of Venice, The Good Hope, Nance Oldfield, and Erikson's Wife were also announced; the last-named piece, for the first time on any stage, being fixed for Friday night.

PRINCE OF WALES'S THEATRE.—Sole Lessees, Mr Fred Benton and Mr Fred J. Little; Business-Manager, Mr Fred Benton.—This week A Marriage of Vengeance is being performed here by Mr and Mrs Fred Benton's company.

EMPIRE PALACE.—Managing-Director, Mr Chas. Barnard; General Manager, Mr W. H. Lennon.—The leading light at this house consists of Vesta Victoria, who is drawing crowded houses to hear her popular songs and ditties. The programme also includes Harland and Rollison, musical eccentrics; the Sisters Anderson, lady gymnasts; Laffan B. Jolly, Edie Anderson, Walter Wallis, Chris Lennar, the British Quartet, and the Empire Bioscope.

WORTHING.

THEATRE ROYAL.—Manager, Herr C. Adolf Seebold.—Great changes are to be expected here under the new management, and already several important alterations have been made in the building. The house is to be open all the year round. On Monday Mr Leslie Norman's company appeared in A Trip to Chinatown. The Welland Strong of Mr Charles Seguin was an excellent portrayal, his singing and dancing being exceedingly good. Mr Jerrold Manville gave a highly successful impersonation of Ben Gay; Mr Leslie Norman ably filled the part of Rashleigh Gay; Mr Oswald Gray was all that could be desired as Saxon Blood, his singing meeting with the success it deserved; Mr Will Smith as Noah Heap was typical, and his dancing was excellent; and Miss Harriet Fawn was a winsome widow, Mrs Guyer. The chorus was also good.

YORK.

THEATRE ROYAL.—Lessees, Messrs Waddington; Acting-Manager, Mr T. H. Barrow.—During the first three nights this week the boards were occupied by Mr Lewis Waller's company, in Miss Elizabeth's Prisoner, a play most ably rendered. Mr Thomas Kingston stood out prominently, his Captain Payton being a remarkably clever study. Miss Eily Malyon was interesting and delightful in the part of Elizabeth, investing it with much natural grace and charm. Mr Hilliard Vox as John Colden had a thankless rôle, to which, however, he did more than justice. Mr Laurence Irving, in Richard Lovelace, was announced for Thursday.

GRAND OPERA HOUSE.—Managing-Director, Mr Wm. Peacock; Acting-Manager, Mr Sidney Brooke.—Perhaps the strongest bill yet presented before the public here is this week headed by Mr Horace Mills and Mr W. H. Rawlins, in a most amusing sketch entitled Mashing the Missus. Both these clever comedians do themselves the fullest justice, with the result that laughter reigns supreme Mr Harry Conlin, too, is particularly smart, his efforts being highly appreciated. The musical act of Francis and Melli is much above the average, and remarkable for its neatness. Adams and Ward, acrobats; the Katos, with their komikal kidgets; Tom Yorke, coster comedian; Rosie Coleman, dancer; Miss Mona M'Donald, vocalist; and O'Connor and Trayner all do well.

"THE ERA" can be obtained at any of Smith and Sons' bookstalls throughout the provinces.

THE NORTH SEA OUTRAGE.

The picture opens with a panoramic view of the Fleet of Crippled Trawlers lying in the harbour at Hull, with numbers of officials and others inspecting the damage done. Following this are a number of snap-shots of the vessels seen at closer range, showing the jagged holes torn by shot and shell in the sides and fittings of the boats. One vessel has a large rent just below the water-line, but the hole was cleverly plugged by the captain and the vessel saved from foundering. A close view of the Mino and the Moulmein shows several members of the crew on deck. The Admiral of the Fleet is seen discussing the disaster with some friends. At the end is a fine portrait of the youth Smith, son of the Captain of the Crane, who was decapitated by a shell. And, lastly, a portrait group of the bereaved Smith family—mother, son, and several children.
Length, 150ft. Price, 5d. per foot—£3 2s. 6d.

LADY PLUMPTON'S MOTOR.

When Lady Plumpton bought her motor car she forgot to take her huge bulk into consideration, and the car, although a powerful one, proved to be inadequate to the demands made upon it, for her ladyship weighs 19 stone. After she had, with great difficulty, been squeezed through the narrow doorway at the back of the car, the machine refused to budge an inch, but with the kind help of several passers-by, who put all their strength into the job, the car is at last started on its way. All goes well until it becomes necessary to pass through a water-splash, and, in the very middle of the water, the car sticks fast and cannot be moved. What is to be done? The chauffeur, for all his efforts, cannot make his car move, and Lady Plumpton gets very excited. She is just handing the baby to her fellow traveller, when the whole thing goes off in a violent explosion. As the smoke clears away it is seen that a terrible catastrophe has occurred; the motor is nothing but a heap of wreckage; the chauffeur is a mangled corpse; her Ladyship's friend and baby are both blown to little bits; her Ladyship herself alone is saved, for even the explosion could not move her. Alone she stands on the wreckage of her property, helpless, in the middle of the water, while bits of motor car, bits of baby, and bits of every description drop from the air on all sides. At last the friendly policeman comes to her help, and taking her up in his arms, he staggers a few feet and then drops her into the deepest part of the water. Her terror and anger combined are beyond description, but at last she gets safely to land, just as the petrol tank catches fire, and the last of the motor car is consumed in a sheet of flame.

Advertisements should be forwarded at once to the Office, 49, WELLINGTON-STREET, STRAND, W.C.
For Scale of Charges see Leader Page.

THE ERA ANNUAL, 1904.
"The Era" Annual, 1904, reappears with all the features that to metropolitan and provincial playgoers make it invaluable as a work of reference. It again contains a list of new plays and important revivals at the London and suburban theatres, with dates of production to the end of November; new plays submitted in the provinces; the theatrical, musical, and equestrian obituary for the year; and other stage matters concerning which information is often desired. Each branch is excellently classified. What may, for convenience sake, be termed the "useful" portions of the "Annual" are sandwiched by forty short stories by popular actors and entertainers, the interest of these contributions being increased by autographs and portraits.—Daily Chronicle, Jan. 16th, 1904

SIR CHARLES WYNDHAM.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

Sir,—In your generous review of my "Biography of Sir Charles Wyndham" there is one little error which I hope you will allow me to correct. In speaking of the production of Her Ladyship's Guardian, at Manchester, in 1865, you say that in it Sir Charles was supported by Mrs Kendal, then Miss Madge Robertson. What I said—see page 28 of my book—was that when the late E. A. Sothern produced a piece founded on the same theme, called A Wild Goose, Miss Madge Robertson appeared as the heroine. Both plays were taken from the source that supplied John Lester Wallack with the successful American drama Rosedale.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT)

BERLIN, THURSDAY, NOV. 3.—The reception accorded to Herr Bjornson's latest work was of a mixed description. The first three acts were listened to with close attention, the third—which is the best—meeting with much applause, but the fourth provoked decided disapproval, and a great success cannot be chronicled. There are so many beauties, both of speech and sentiment, in the work that it is particularly hard to be disappointed. One of the principal weaknesses is the excess of monologues; these features of a past age are made use of in each act; with at times a comical effect, notably when the elder Dag addresses himself to the Deity. The action passes in Norway at the present time, the scene being Dagland, the family estate of the Dags. It is the conflict between the old and the young that is the theme, and on this subject Björnson puts some excellent ideas before us. We are introduced at once to Frau Dag, an amiable, motherly Frenchwoman, and her son Stener, who has just returned from some years' sojourn in Australia. Stener, a clever engineer, believes in progress and the power of work. He longs to make use of his knowledge and strength, and has conceived the idea of turning a great waterfall on the estate to account. The water has fallen into the sea for hundreds of years and been no good to anyone, but the elder Dag is utterly opposed to change, and forbids his son peremptorily to entertain the scheme. All idea of the noise and bustle of steam and machinery is obnoxious to Herr Dag, and though he is something of a despot, we cannot help feeling he has some right on his side. His elder daughter, Ragna, returns from America, whither she went to make her own way in the world, driven away by her father's harshness. She, a brave, bright girl, has brought plenty of new ideas home too, and thoroughly sympathises with Stener's scheme. The mother and younger daughter Berthe are divided between love for Dag and sympathy with the others. The scene in the third act, where father and son first, and father and daughter afterwards, combat the rights of old over young, is very interesting. But old Dag remains obstinate and hard, and finally declares he will sell Dagland altogether. This he does for a period of three years, but the contract is obtained possession of in the end by Stener, the purchaser being a would-be wooer of Ragna. How this comes about is not clear, but so it is. Ragna leaves the house to climb the mountain—which is a sort of mystical symbol in the traditions of Dagland. She falls, and is brought into a hut wounded and sore. This catastrophe is the means of bringing about a complete reconciliation. Dag says he wishes to have peace with his children, and he gives his consent to Stener's great industrial scheme. The interpretation of the play was admirable, particular praise being due to Fräulein Rabitow, Frau Pix, Herr Sommerstorff, and Herr Klein.

AT the Luisen Theatre a new three-act farce entitled Fritzchen was given for the first time on any stage on Friday. The author, Herr C. Emil, has yet to gain his spurs. Fritzchen is crude, in spite of some amusing scenes, and the misunderstandings are too numerous to be anything but confusing. Every type of character known to farce-makers has been pressed into service; "a laugh at any price" is evidently the author's motto. The main idea is that Fritzchen is believed to be the son of a captain's sister; but after twenty years of search for the "boy," the captain discovers that Fritzchen is—or was—a pet horse. His sister's letters were full of solicitude for her favourite, and so exaggerated were her expressions of affection that the captain—according to Herr Emil—could not help but believe they referred to a son. The curtain falls upon the captain's indignant exclamation, "For twenty years I have been searching for a horse. What an ass I am!" The piece was well played in the chief rôles, although, as a whole, it dragged, and the audience accorded a merciful reception, tempered with justice.

GERHART HAUPTMANN'S historical play Florian Geyer was reproduced last week at the Lessing. It was received with acclamation, the author—who has entirely recovered from the effects of his long illness—being called and recalled before the curtain. Florian Geyer was something of a failure when it first saw the light, some eight years ago, but Herr Hauptmann has rewritten it, and the result is satisfactory. The piece has already been described in your columns, and is only interesting to German audiences. It was magnificently acted, Herr Rittner, in the title-rôle, being an ideal leader of the people.

"MARINEMUTTER," a comedy, in three acts, by Frau Margarete Von Pochhammer, was given at a matinée in the Lustspiel-Haus on Saturday. There is not very much to be said in its favour; it is of the amiably harmless type, and met with a cordial reception. Things nautical being much in vogue here just now and the object of the matinée being a national charity were two points in the authoress's favour. Perhaps having met with so much encouragement the lady may write a really good play next time for there are traces of talent in this one. The principal characters in the piece are women; there is one lady who once upon a time loved a sailor, but her fear of the perils to which her husband would be exposed made her renounce love's young dream. Later on she married someone else, but her son wanted to be a sailor, and her daughter was equally enthusiastic about the sea. The young man gains his heart's desire after enormous obstacles have been laid in his way, and his sister marries a naval officer, whose mother is proud of her son's calling. The contrast between the two mothers forms the chief feature of the piece, which was well and brightly acted.

A THREE-ACT comedy, by Maurice Vaucaire, the German title of which is Fesseln der Liebe, was give at the Lustspiel-Haus on Thursday with no very special results. The Austrian dramatist, Herr Arthur Schnitzler, has written a laudatory prologue to the translation of the work, but its reception here was not favourable. After the second act a spirit of opposition set in and made itself unpleasantly manifest, notwithstanding good all-round acting. It is highly probable that the translation of the play had much to do with its non-success. The title alone is misleading, having nothing in common with the original Petit Chagrin.

MADAME CALVÉ is our latest foreign star, and has been greeted with enthusiasm. She made her début at the Royal Opera House in the role of Carmen, before a crowded audience, and a complete triumph must be recorded. Madame Calvé was well supported by the Royal Opera company.

SIGNORA DUSE'S season at the new National Theatre opens this week with Monna Vanna. Magda, La Dame aux Camelias, Ibsen's Hedda Gabler, and Maurice Donnay's L'Autre Danger are also in the bill, the two last-mentioned plays being novelties here, that is to say, with Signora Duse. Booking has been brisk for some days past.

OSCAR VON CHELIUS has just completed a new three-act opera, entitled Die Vernarrte Prinzess. It is a "fairy play," the writer of the words being Herr Otto Julius Bierbaum, who has done a good deal of similar work. The opera has been accepted by the Court Theatre at Schwerin, and is to be produced in December, after which, should all turn out satisfactory, we shall see it here.

MRS. GILBERT'S FAREWELL.

(FROM OUR NEW YORK CORRESPONDENT).

Mrs G. H. Gilbert, the oldest actress on the American stage, commenced her farewell tour at the New Lyceum Theatre in this city on the 24th inst., appearing in a four-act play, called Granny, adapted by Clyde Fitch from the French of Georges Mitchell. The opening performance was marked by extraordinary demonstrations, and it is safe to assert that these will be repeated at each succeeding representation. Of stage favourites New York has quite a number, but Mrs Gilbert is, and has been for many years, something more than a favourite. She is an object of genuine affection. It is forty years since she made her first appearance in this city, and she is now eighty-three. When she decided to retire Mr Charles Frohman, under whose management she has been for the last five years, at once made arrangements for a farewell tour which should prove a brilliant and memorable triumph for the veteran actress, and commissioned Mr Clyde Fitch to prepare a suitable play for her. The tour will cover a period of twenty weeks, and extend as far as San Francisco.

During the first two acts of the play under notice, the Granny whom Mrs Gilbert impersonated was anything but the kind and motherly old soul that the audience expected to see. Instead, she was a prejudiced and determined old lady. But in the later scenes her tenderer and truer qualities came to the surface, and the final impression was made more effective by force of contrast. The story deals with the second marriage of John Allenby, and shows how it disturbed the pleasant relations that had existed in his home, over which his mother-in-law, Mrs Tompson, affectionately called "Granny," had presided for some time after the death of the first Mrs Allenby. The memory of the departed Margaret is held very dear by the household. Her chair is still brought to the table, and fresh flowers are always at the place she once occupied. Her son Jack is grown to young manhood, and Margaret's mother is at the head of the home. Everything is going along in a peaceful manner when the members of the family are thrown into a state of consternation by the discovery that John Allenby is spending his spare time in the company of a Mrs Mason, about whom nothing is known except that she comes from some place in Pennsylvania, where she was divorced, has a young daughter, Dora, and sings in a church choir. Granny, of all the family, is most opposed to Mrs Mason. The old lady looks upon her as an adventuress, and dreads the possibility of her being brought into the house to fill Margaret's place. So she does what women usually do in such circumstances, and takes John to task for his conduct. And John, of course, resents his mother-in-law's interference, defends Mrs Mason, and announces that, as he has asked her to dinner, he wants a place set for her—at the table where there has long been a vacant chair. Pleadings are of no avail, and threats only make John Allenby the more determined. Granny is bluntly told, when her plain talk has made him angry, that if she does not like the situation of affairs she can go. Mrs Mason arrives, and the dreaded scene occurs. Granny takes her departure from her son-in-law's home and so does young John Allenby. Six years have elasped when the curtain goes up again. None of the terrible things that Granny prophesied have come to pass. On the contrary, John Allenby and his wife are living very happily. She has proved herself a worthy woman, having been maligned by the gossips, and her daughter Dora has grown up to be a very charming girl. Granny comes back to the neighbourhood of the old home and discovers the real situation. It is evident that John made a wise choice after all. So Granny "gives in," and in the final scenes tries to atone for her mistake by reuniting the family, artfully contriving a love-match between the daughter of the second wife and young Jack Allenby.

Mrs Gilbert played her part delightfully, exhibiting wonderful vigour and vivacity. When she first appeared she received an ovation, and the audience manifested its approval and pleasure so frequently and persistently that the aged actress found it pretty hard to maintain her composure. Happily, however, her fears that she would break down were not realised. After the final curtain, Mrs Gilbert spoke an epilogue, at the conclusion of which the orchestra played "Auld Lang Syne," and the audience joined in as it filed out of the theatre. The epilogue was as follows:—

Dear friends in front—the curtain must not fall
Until a grateful woman says good-bye to all.
Just think of all the kindness that I've got of you!
I'd like to be the "Granny" of the lot of you!

Old age to bear becomes a happy load
When love and friendship line the lengthening road,
And as I've lived long years in this dear land,
I've never lacked the pressure of your hand,
Nor missed your smile the times I tried to jest,
Nor wanted for a tear when tears were best.
So when the curtain's down, the footlights out,
Once and for all for me, I'll turn about
And in my memories live again each day
Your hands and hearts made glad for me my way.

When with Augustin Daly I acted many parts!
And Jimmy Lewis, bless him, played with me at hearts!
And Ada Rehan, the dear creature, won her brilliant spurs?
And John Drew, cheeky darling, stole my heart and hers.
And charming Annie Russell, and more than I can name—
But I'll keep them in my memory, every one the same!

Dear Days! So many, too, red lettered ones, and gold!
The curtain falls on all of them—I'm eighty-three years old.
Good-by, old friends, new friends, my children everyone of you!
Listen, for it's true, I love each mother's son of you!
For wealth! for fame! my goodness! I don't care a filbert!
If only in your hearts you'll keep old Mrs Gilbert.

Mrs Gilbert was born at Rochdale, in Lancashire, on Oct. 21, 1821. She began her stage career at the old Haymarket Theatre as a dancer. Her maiden name was Hartley. In 1846 she married George H. Gilbert, also a dancer in the company of Taglioni, and three years later the pair emigrated to America. Mr Gilbert died some years ago. It was at John Ellsler's theatre in Cleveland that Mrs Gilbert determined to abandon dancing for acting. Lady Creamly, in The Famous Family, and Miss Hardcastle, in She Stoops to Conquer, were her first parts there. She made a distinct hit in John Brougham's Pocahontas, and proved her versatility during the same year by playing Lady Macbeth with Edwin Booth in the Louisville stock company. Mrs Gilbert made her New Yorke début as a member of Mrs John Wood's company in Finesse, a comedy written by the Countess of Gifford, and produced at the Olympic Theatre, long since demolished, on Sept. 19, 1864. Mr J. H. Stoddart, who is a few years younger than Mrs Gilbert, was a member of the same company. In 1869 she joined the late Augustin Daly's company, and thereafter appeared in many prominent rôles, winning the esteem of the public and the affection of her associates. In 1886 she visited England with the Daly company, and appeared as Mrs Zantippa Babbit, in A Night Off, at the Strand Theatre. Mrs Gilbert became a member of Mr Charles Frohman's company in 1899, appearing in support of Miss Annie Russell in Jerome K. Jerome's comedy Miss Hobbs, at the old Lyceum Theatre. Her later appearances were made in Captain Marshall's A Royal Family, Clyde Fitch's The Girl and the Judge, Mrs Ryley's Mice and Men, and Haddon Chambers's The Younger Mrs Parling.

Standing's Heath Desmond, his breezy style and irresistible humour as the Irish artist being particularly refreshing. Mr Herbert H. Young as the Rev. Michel and Polo carry through their difficult muscle and wrist acts in a wonderfully easy and unaffected manner. The Brothers Lavelle are also smart as comedy acrobats. On Monday, Oct 31,
"THREE LITTLE MAIDS."

Mr Chas. Maudona's principal company, in the popular musical play Three Little Maids, is a great attraction here this week. The little maids in question find charming representatives in Miss Janet Reeve, Miss Gertrude Melville, and Miss Norah Guy, all of whom play and sing most artistically. Lady St. Mallory is ably portrayed by Miss Kate Forster, and Miss Laura Wright makes quite one of the hits of the evening as Gretchen, her song and dance in the second act with Cupid being redemanded time after time. Miss Jennie Edgar, Miss Ethel May, and Miss Ella Danicourt are pretty and graceful as Lady Rosemary Beaulieu, Venetia Grafton, and Lady Marjorie Crichton respectively, and Miss Mabel Sarl is a duly officious Miss Price, the manageress of Lady St. Mallory's teashop. Mr Arthur Longley is excruciatingly funny as Lord Cheyne, otherwise "Daisy;" Mr Haddon Cave is excellent as Brian Molyneux; and Mr Charles Leverton does well as the Rev. Mr Branscombe. Mr Gus Oxley is excellent as Cupid, a caddie, and sings and dances throughout with admirable verve. Mr Alec Chentrens is an able exponent of M. De L'Orme, and uses a charming voice with great effect. The chorus is large in number, good to look at, good to listen to, and well dressed, and the orchestra is most ably conducted by Mr Julian Rutt. The scenery is very effective.

THE Avenue Theatre will be reopened early in December, under the management of Mr H. J. Grant-Seymour, with a new and original comic opera called Ladyland, in two acts, written by Mr Eustace Ponsonby, the music by Mr Frank Lambert.

"DR. FAUSTUS" AT THE COURT.

In presenting ancient plays to modern audiences, the Elizabethan Stage Society has done much service to English literature, and though the representations are not illustrated by modern scenery there is much to be said for the draped stage and the revival of the early conditions that were in vogue in the days of the Fortune Theatre. Mr Poel, who is responsible for the direction of these performances, might protest with many another earnest student against the modern custom of illustrating Shakespeare's plays with all the realism that up-to-date mechanical appliances can supply, and with all the beauty of scenic art that has become quite a common-place with present-day revivals. It may be said, and with much truth, that plays which have come down to us through the centuries because of their real power, their poetic beauty, and their literary excellence can do very well without the meretricious aid of scenic decoration; but no less an authority than Mr Tree has laid down a very sound law: "Whatever tends to quicken the imagination of the audience—in fact, to create illusion—is justifiable on the stage. Whatever detracts from the appreciation of the author's work and disturbs the illusion is to be deprecated—is, in fact, bad art." Dr. Faustus lends itself to scenic beauty, but students of English drama, to whom only the play appeals, may well be content with the manner of its revival adopted at the Court. The first literary version of Faust, it is generally conceded by commentators, was the Volksbuch, which, published by Shiess in 1587 at Frankfort on-the-Main, soon after appeared in England as The History of the Damnable Life and Deserved Death of Dr. John Faustus. To this translation of the Faust-book Marlowe generally adhered; that is to say, in the incidents of the drama and the sequence he followed his authority. The wearisome comic passages, as Mr Havelock Ellis points out, which "Marlowe may or may not have written, are copied with special fidelity." Goethe's opinion of Marlowe's Faustus we know. He had thought of translating it; when it was mentioned he burst out with an exclamation of praise: "How greatly it is all planned!" It is in the selection of the serious incidents from the placid prose narrative that Marlowe's genius for the tragic poetry of intense emotion is especially revealed. "Perhaps the passage of Marlowe which most profoundly influenced Shakespeare and other poets is," as Mr Havelock Ellis points out, "not the awful and intense scene with which the poem closes, but the address to Helen. The scene that contains this wonderful passage, aflame with impassioned loveliness, corresponds in its bare outlines exactly to that chapter of the prose History, in which the Doctor,

THE GRAND.

On Monday, Oct. 31, the Drama, in Four Acts, by Walter Melville, entitled "A GIRL'S CROSS ROADS."

Islington is favoured this week with a return visit of Mr Walter Melville's company in the above play, which it will be remembered achieved so signal a success on its original production last year. Mr Melville is always fortunate in the companies which present his dramas. Miss Beatrice Homer now plays Barbara Wade, the central character in the drama, and for her performance in the part we have nothing but warm praise. A character study of this kind makes, naturally, very heavy demands on the artistic resources of the interpreter. Miss Homer, however, was fully equal to every demand made on her, her expressive facial play in act three and her heavy scene in the last act making her performance something in the nature of a personal triumph. Miss Violet Barton-Aster as Constance Cornell played a simple and ingenuous rôle with great charm and success, her acting being distinctly pleasant in its utter absence of artificiality. Miss Octavia Noel as Nelly Meadows had a rôle in distinct opposition to the former, and by her vigorous impersonation she made the sharp distinction very apparent. Miss Emily Custance as Tilly Vane supplies much welcome light relief, which was neatly appreciated. Mr Wingold Lawrence again sustains his old rôle of Jack Livingstone, and once again we have to commend a thoroughly artistic and effective performance. Mr Edwin J. Wilde as Meadows, the farmer, supplies a well-conceived character study. Mr John Hitchins as Topsy Turvey once again took every opportunity of raising laughter, and the amount of amusement he causes testifies to the success of his efforts Mr Leonard Rouse as Lumley played excellently and with a happy absence of all tendency to overdo the part. Mr John Brooks in his old part of Ramsden gave a good sound performance. Messrs Richard Zarr and Charles Dowe were commendable as a policeman and a pickpocket; and a special word of praise is due to Mr Charles Terry as Dr. Weston, a very sincere and excellent performance. The remaining smaller parts were all in good hands. The scenery and the mounting of the play were in Mr Melville's usual lavish scale, and Mr Reeve's incidental music was an important feature of the evening. Mr Davey's early door programme contained a novelty of some note, Mr F. W. Millis, the well-known and popular Australian ventriloquist, producing a new and original sketch entitled The Dear Homeland. The little episode which is enacted by Mr Millis and a lady is quite simple in character, dealing as it does with the anticipations of a wounded soldier as to his return to the old home in Australia, and the realistic dream which he has on lying down to rest. In this latter scene Mr Millis is found sitting together with the other members of his family in his home, and as the latter are merely lay figures, nearly all of different nationalities, it will be apparent how versatile he is. The novelty should form a strong attraction during his ensuing visit "down-under."

THE PAVILION.

On Monday, Oct. 31, the Drama, by George R. Sims and Robert Buchanan, entitled "THE ENGLISH ROSE."

A capital performance of Messrs G. R. Sims and Robert Buchanan's play, The English Rose, was given at the Pavilion on Monday. Mr Ashley Page as Harry O'Mailley is throughout consistently characteristic, and it would be difficult to find a better representative of the part. Mr J. C. Aubrey showed to great advantage as the Knight of Ballyveeney, giving evidence of careful study, and declaiming in a manner that could not fail to command due recognition. A fine delineation of the scheming Captain Macdonell is given by Mr Frank Harding, who is to be commended for his artistic attention to detail, and Mr Ernest Stern makes good use of his opportunities as Father Michael. Mr Charles Garry gives a clever impersonation of Randall O'Mara, which is somewhat slightly marred by certain pronounced mannerisms. Mr Harry Barford is a very hard worker, and causes great amusement by his able performance of Nicodemus Dickenson, while Mr Wilfred E Shine gives a dry and humorous representation of Sergeant O'Reilly, which creates unbounded fun. Mr W. Dempsey, although uncertain of his lines, was a capable Sir Philip Kingston, and good service was rendered by Mr Roland Ryley as O'Brien, Mr H. Gibbs as Cassidy, Mr J. Thompson as Farmer Flannigan, Mr D. Kelly as O'Shea, Miss Kitty Cardigan as Judy, and Miss Milly Murray as Widow Flannigan. Conspicuous ability is displayed by Mr Harry Bristow in the character of Larry M'Nulty, which is made to stand out prominently by reason of the vigour infused into the part, and Mr Fred Boustead enacts Shaun with his usual efficiency. Miss Marion Denvil as Ethel Kingston (the English Rose) succeeds in giving an admirable rendition which abounds in tenderness and pathos, while Miss Daisy Scudamore finds favour as Bridget O'Mara. Miss Tina Mavro was pleasing as Louisa Ann Ferguson, and Miss Clare Elston did all that was necessary at Patsie Blake. The scenic effects are excellent and the stage arrangements skilful, while the groupings, &c., give effective life and colour to the incidents depicted.

THE CORONET.

On Monday, Oct. 31, "LITTLE MARY."

Like nearly all of J. M. Barrie's plays there is an indefinable charm about this work which appeals to all classes of playgoers, while baffling adequate description. "Men are God's trees and women are God's flowers," says Mr Barrie in effect in nearly all his plays, and Moira Loney, the "little mother" and heroine of this piece, in her altruistic enthusiasm reminds one of Tennyson's beautiful lines in "Sir Galahad"—"I muse on joy that will not cease, Pure spaces clothed in living beams, Pure lilies of eternal peace, Whose odours haunt my dreams." Miss Hilda Trevelyan succeeds beyond one's wildest hopes in the presentment of the dear, impulsive, tender-hearted little Irish girl, who blossoms into the almost inspired altruist after patient and protracted study of her grandfather's pamphlet. Her's is just the temperament to make a success in the part of "the stormy petrel," stormy only to the opinionated and self-sufficient, for does she not cause subtle changes everywhere she goes, weaving around all an influence for good, which unconsciously ennobles even the self-righteous and the worldly? She depicts the impetuous, trusting, yet self-reliant Moira to the life, and brings out the lights and shades of the character in strong contrast, and always with an air of refinement and distinction. Mr John Hare gives a delightfully artistic rendering of the part of the kindly, if indolent, nobleman, the Earl of Carlton, his easy, natural, and polished style well sets off this fine character. Mr Carter Pickford as Lord Cecil Rolfe, the Earl of Carlton's son, contributes a most diverting sketch of character, the invertebrate young sprig of nobility alternately earning our approbation and contempt. Mr Eric Maturin thoroughly enters into the humours of the part of the schoolboy Earl of Plumleigh, who under the influence of Moira's treatment is transformed from a lolling, idling sluggard and glutton into a pattern of energy and activity. Mr Fred Grove makes his mark in the small part of the half-crazy, but clever, old Irishman, Terence O'Reilly. Mr Rudge Harding is vastly entertaining as the pompous, pragmatical physician, Sir Jennings Pyke, and Mr Clifford Brooke ably seconds him as his shadow and echo, Dr. Topping, who shows considerable aptitude in divining the psychological moment when the cheque for "services rendered" should be forthcoming. Miss Helen Rous is excellent as the irresolute and malleable Countess of Plumleigh. Miss Kathleen Gordon-Lee makes the most of the small part of Lady Milly and gives one an idea that she could play a bigger part equally well, and Miss Beatrice Kelston is entirely satisfactory as the actress, Eleanor Gray, who falls out of love under Moira's influence, just as quickly and completely as her sweetheart, Cecil. Mr Edgar B. Payne takes good care of the minor rôle of Deighton, and contrives to score therein. Frederick Fenn and Richard Price's clever playlet, 'Op o' Me Thumb, is played as a curtain-raiser, and as Amanda Affleck, of the title-rôle, Miss Hilda Trevelyan shows her marvellous versatility by a touching rendering of the part, tears and laughter alternating as she shows the various phases of character of this truly Dickensian sketch of a workhouse girl. Mr Rudge Harding as the bluff, good-hearted coster, Horace Greensmith creates a remarkably good impression. Miss Emily Grove is a capital Madame Jeanne Marie Napoleon De Gallifer Ridier. Miss Helen Rous does well as Clem (Mrs Galloway), and the parts of Celeste and Rose Gordon are safe in the hands of Misses Frances Wetherall and J. Innes-Ker.

THE CAMDEN.

On Monday, Oct. 31, the Musical Play entitled THE ORCHID.

Mr Leslie Hughes has a fine list of attractions this autumn, but we doubt whether any will prove more popular than the latest Gaiety success, The Orchid, which is paying its first visit here this week. Mr George Edwardes has selected a capital company, and has mounted and dressed the play in a most lavish style. The company plays with immense energy, and the whole thing goes with a swing. Encores were frequent throughout Monday evening. Mr George Gregory appears as Meakin, and proves himself to be a droll comedian. Mr Laurence Grossmith excels in the "Johnny" type of character, and his Guy Scrymgeour is a clever and diverting piece of work. He makes a hit with all his songs, notably with "Bedelia." Miss Coralie Blythe makes a charming and dainty Lady Violet, and, of course, her ditty on the play which was here last week, Little Mary, is vociferously applauded. Miss Gertrude Gilliam is a captivating Josephine, and sings very sweetly; Caroline Vokins is capitally played by Miss Irene Verona; and Miss Ethel Griffies makes a smart Zelie Rumbert. Mr Ellis Ogilvie, excellently made up as a well-known statesman, is decidedly good as Mr Aubrey Chesterton. The excitable Comte Raoul is amusingly portrayed by Mr Sam Walsh; Mr Donald Hall makes a good Ronald Faussett; and Zaccary has a clever exponent in Mr Sidney Vincent. A very bewitching little lady is Phisbe, as played by Miss Luna Love. The other characters are all in safe hands, and the chorus deserves much praise for their unflagging energy, which materially adds to the enjoyment of the play. The orchestra does excellent work under the bâton of Mr Ernée Woodville. Mr Adair Nelson is the manager of the company, and Mr Wybert Stamford stage-manages with the best results.

THE KING'S, HAMMERSMITH.

On Monday, Oct 31, the Romantic Light Opera, by Henry Hamilton and Ivan Caryll, entitled "THE DUCHESS OF DANTZIC."

The advent of Mr George Edwardes's Lyric Theatre company had been eagerly looked forward to, and it is not to be wondered at that The Duchess of Dantzic was hailed at the King's Theatre on Monday evening with the most unbounded enthusiasm. The handsome and capacious house was crowded from floor to ceiling with an audience not one of whom left the theatre without feeling satisfied at the luxurious provision made. No amount of praise could be bestowed which failed to include Mr George Edwardes, whose outlay must have been prodigious. The receptions accorded to the principals of the cast when they made their appearances were by no means to be despised, and encores were abundant. Miss Evie Greene's creation of Sans Gêne seems to have broadened since the commencement of the run, and it now stands out as a performance which does her infinite credit. Her acting in the garden and throne room scenes was absolutely fine, and her voice was in splendid trim. A vivacious Lisette was Miss Billie Burke, whose interpolated song and chorus, "The Little Midinette," received well-deserved applause. Mr Leonard Mackay was excellent both as the Vicomte De Bethune, and subsequently as Adhemar, and Mr Morgan Williams won approval as Captain Regnier. The Napoleon Bonaparte of Mr Holbrook Blinn was a perfect piece of acting, and his success was very early assured. Mr Herbert Clayton made an exceedingly favourable impression as Lefebvre. Papillon, entrusted to Mr Courtice Pounds, could not be otherwise than a finished and popular rôle, and his milliners' chorus in the second act roused the audience to enthusiasm. Renée was charmingly rendered by Miss Adrienne Augarde, whose refreshingly youthful style won much approbation. Her stirring singing of "The Little Caporal" was well worthy of the applause gained. Napoleon's two sisters, Caroline and Pauline, were satisfactorily enacted by Miss Elizabeth Firth and Miss Doris La Tour. Miss Mabel Lorrell made an imposing Empress Josephine. The chorus was quite up to the Lyric standard, and the stage-management reflected great credit upon Mr J. B. Gordon. The largely augmented orchestra was ably handled by Mr P. W. Halton. The scenery by Harker and the dresses and appointments were a feast of gorgeous and harmonious colouring.

THE ELEPHANT AND CASTLE.

On Monday, Oct. 31, the Drama entitled "A MAN'S SHADOW."

An excellent house on Monday expressed hearty approval of the policy of the management in presenting this stirring drama. The stock company is responsible for the production, and the artists deserve full credit for their efforts to render justice to their respective parts. The play is exceedingly well mounted, and the general effect created shows the touch of a master hand at production. Mr Ernest E. Norris undertakes the dual rôle of Lucien Laroque and Luversan, and his striking and powerful embodiment of the characters commands the entire approbation of the house. Mr Joynson Powell plays with marked ability as De Noirville, and as Sergeant Piccolot Mr Harry Paulton, jun., is very successful. The part of Corporal Tristot is in the capable hands of Mr Jo. Monkhouse; and Mr Edwin Bennett scores in the rôle of Gerbier. Mr Paige Lawrence is excellent as an inspector; and Mr Thomas Ball is satisfactory as a valet. Mr Howard Templeton makes a dignified president; Mr Dudley Hayes, in the rôle of Jean Ricordot, contributes a good study; and Mr Arthur Wilson is effective as the Advocate-General. As Madame Laroque Mrs Bennett is charming and sympathetic, and her acting always reaches a high level. Miss Agnes Paulton is full of life and animation as Victoire; Miss Judith Kyrle makes a fascinating Julie de Noirville; and Miss Christine Williams acts quite naturally as a child. Several minor parts are all intelligently treated.

ALEXANDRA THEATRE, N.

On Monday, Oct. 31, the Farcical Comedy, in Three Acts, by Charles H. Hawtrey, entitled "THE PRIVATE SECRETARY."

Although it is many years since the Rev. Robert Spalding first came to town, judging by his reception at Stoke Newington on Monday last he has by no means outstayed his welcome. The vagaries of the meek-and-mild curate and the irascible uncle from India evoke as much laughter as ever, and the piece was played on Monday last to a running accompaniment of incessant laughter. Mr Eugene Stafford is fortunate in still retaining Mr W. Hargreaves as a member of his company, and his performance of Old Cattermole is a tower of strength to the production. Mr Geoffrey Guise is successful in presenting the eccentricities and peculiarities of the Rev. Robert Spalding, and an excellent sketch of the snobbish tailor, Sydney Gibson, comes from Mr Wilfrid Compton. The two young men, Douglas Cattermole and Harry Marsland, are lightly and brightly played by Messrs A. Austin Leigh and Vivian Gilbert respectively, and Mr Raymond Chester is in every way a satisfactory Mr Marsland, M.F.H. The spiritualistic Miss Ashford is played with a full appreciation of the possibilities of the part by Mrs Alfred Davies, and Misses Mary E. Deverell and Dora Grey as Eva Webster and Edith Marsland play with much vivacity and charm, and thoroughly enter into the spirit of the piece. Of her opportunities as Mrs Stead, Douglas Cattermole's landlady, Miss Cecily Wade makes the most. The time-honoured Nan; or, Good for Nothing, precedes the longer play, the part of Nan being sustained by Miss Dora Grey with very great vivacity, expressiveness, and talent.

THE MARLBOROUGH.

On Monday, Oct 31, the Musical Play, "THE CHERRY GIRL."

Despite the recent frequent visits of musical plays here, Mr Purcell evidently knows what his patrons require, for an excellent reception is being accorded Mr C. Lubbock's company in The Cherry Girl this week. The scenery and stage appointments are extremely pretty, the costumes present a great variety of colour, the music, performed very ably by the Marlborough orchestra, under the direction of Mr Locknane, is bright and tuneful, and the songs are very favourably received. In the rôle of the Queen Miss Elsie Molloy is very effective, but it is by her grace and abandon, disguised as Pansy, that she charms the audience most. Her songs and dances are much appreciated, and are worthy of high praise. As Pansy Miss Katie May enters into the spirit of the part, and is bright and entertaining. Of little Dorothy Frostick we cannot speak in too high terms for her clever performance as Dimples, her acting, singing, and dancing throughout being admirable for one of her tender years. Master Harry Williams is a clever young artist, and seems quite at home in the part of Snowball, the sweep's boy, and yet another budding young comedian is to be found in Master J. Saxo as the Rose of the Riviera. Mr J. Herbert in the dual-rôle of Moonshine, the white pierrot, and in act two as Happy Joe, is to be commended for his clever representations and for the manner in which he renders his songs. He also contributes some very clever dancing. Mr C. St. John Medley also undertakes two parts, Starlight, the black pierrot, and, in the second act, the Squire of Holmwood Hall, and creates a good impression in both rôles. As Esau, the monkey, and the donkey, White Surrey, Mr Fred Le Franc comes in for a good share of applause. Messrs Charles Seymour and Fred Delaine keep the audience in a good humour each time they appear, first as Chamberlains and afterwards as Village Beadles. There are numerous others in the cast, all deserving of praise, as they leave no stone unturned to ensure the success of the play. During the evening Miss Lottie Stone's Wisteria Troupe of lady dancers gives some cleverly executed dances; and the Steinway Singing Quartet renders invaluable assistance. Mr F. R. Yeulett, Mr Purcell's popular acting-manager, looks well after the comfort of his patrons.

DALSTON THEATRE.

On Monday, Oct. 31, for the First Time in London, the Sensational Domestic Drama, in Four Acts, by Edward Marris, entitled "AS MIDNIGHT CHIMES."

Luke Dezzard	Mr Melville Bickford
Dave Stannard	Mr Frank E. Petley
Ezra Gamble	Mr Henry Beaufort
Tat Spavvin	Witty Watty Walton
Nat Wilson	Mr Percy Maitland
Capt. Trevethick	Mr Payn Williams
Limpy Mudge	Mr Dan Parker
P.-C. Tibbott	Mr Arthur Proctor
Warder Blount	Mr Arthur Jenner
Detective Pollard	Mr John Mayall
Ben Cooper	Mr Stanley Worden
Dodgy Ike	Mr Walter Preston
Suzette	Miss Annie Megson
Zamora	Miss Iris M. Ward
Little Davy	Miss Minnie Ethel
Mary Stannard	Miss Gertrude Price

This drama, which was produced at the Alexandra Theatre, Hull, on July 11 last, is not lacking in any of those qualities which are regarded as essential in a popular play. The sensational incidents, which are cleverly led up to, are supplemented by an abundance of comedy business, and the opportunities for powerful acting which the drama affords are taken full advantage of by Mr Edward Marris's excellent company. The hero of the story is a fisherman named Dave Stannard, and the first scene is the exterior of his cottage in the village of Barryhaven. He is falsely accused of having received contraband goods, but Nat Wilson, a coastguard, has reason to believe that the charge is a true one. Dave's wife, Mary, was formerly a sweetheart of his, and she appeals to him not to report anything against her husband. Stannard, however, declares his innocence, and the men get to high words and then to blows. Luke Dezzard, a dealer in contraband goods, enters unperceived by Stannard and Wilson, and seizing a gun belonging to the fisherman, shoots the coastguard. A witness of what has taken place is little Davy, Stannard's son, and Dezzard contrives to send the boy away to prevent him giving evidence. As the fisherman is found standing by the dead body of Wilson and his gun lying on the the ground he is taken into custody on a charge of murder. Ezra Gamble, Mary's father, is in fear of Dezzard, who possesses the knowledge that the old man has escaped from prison, and threatens if he is not obeyed to denounce him to the police. He is compelled to assist Dezzard in the contraband goods business, and by this heartless villain's instructions he takes little Davy to London. In the waiting room at Rookley Station are assembled some half-dozen prisoners in charge of a warder, amongst them being Stannard. They are awaiting the arrival of a train to convey them to prison. Dezzard comes to see Gamble and his charge off, and to induce Stannard to believe that his wife is false to him. Tat Spavvin, a railway porter contrives, unseen, to unlock the handcuff which confines Dave, and the latter, taking sudden advantage of his freedom, fastens the fetters upon Dezzard and escapes in the train which arrives at that moment. To a warehouse at Shadwell wharf rented by Dezzard, little Davy is conveyed by his grandfather and here they make the acquaintance of Zamora, a Hindoo girl, who has been betrayed by Luke and who haunts the place in search of the child which has been taken away from her and murdered by its inhuman father. Dezzard, having rendered Ezra Gamble senseless by a blow, compels Davy to write a letter to his mother asking her to come to him at once. The letter is conveyed by the Hindoo girl, who brings Mary to the wharf. Dezzard proposes that they shall leave the country together, and when she indignantly rejects his offer he threatens to force her to comply with his desires, when he is confronted by Stannard, who has been concealed in a large packing case. Spavvin, disguised as an old man, has also gained access to the warehouse, and has a hand in hoisting Dezzard by the crane and dropping him into the river. He, however, escapes drowning, and turns up again at his own house in London, where he receives a visit from Ezra Gamble, who has given information to the police. Dezzard is compelled to sign a paper admitting that he murdered Wilson, and while the two men are engaged in a struggle the police arrive and arrest the villain. He, thereupon swallows a powder which he has brought from India, and the effect of which is to throw the person taking it into a death-like trance, which lasts for five days. He has, previous to the arrival of Ezra, instructed Zamora to enter the family vault at the expiration of five days and release him. He hands her the key, and she promises to obey, but learning that her child is dead she stabs herself. When, therefore, the effects of the Indian drug have passed off and Dezzard recovers consciousness no one comes to release him. He can scarcely breathe in the close atmosphere, and the horror of the situation drives him raving mad. He hears the church clock chime the midnight hour, and falls in a swoon upon the floor. Gamble has entertained suspicions as to the death of Dezzard, and visits the vault. Luke recovers and the visitor is seized by the madman, who eventually escapes, while Ezra is rescued from death in the vault by his little grandson.

Mr Melville Bickford deserves to be highly complimented upon his powerful embodiment of Luke Dezzard. The wholly desperate character of the man was clearly and incisively depicted; and his coolness in the hour of danger was sufficiently emphasised. But the villain looses his nerve when he finds himself in the family burial place, apparently doomed to die a terrible death, and he is, moreover, tormented by the apparitions of his victims. In this scene Mr Bickford gave a thrilling performance as the madman who eventually flies from the vault uttering ear-haunting shrieks. Mr Frank E. Petley can always be relied upon to give a fine manly portrayal of a hero of melodrama, and his Dave Stannard is no exception to the rule. Mr Henry Beaufort can also be complimented on a sound piece of acting as Ezra Gamble. Mr Percy Maitland did well as Nat Wilson and Mr Payne Williams scored as the kindly disposed Captain Trevethick, Chief Constable of Barryhaven. Mr Dan Parker gave a clever character sketch of Limpy Mudge, chainman at Shadwell Wharf, and the same remark applies to Arthur Jenner's Warder Blount of Bexeter Gaol. Useful work was done by Mr Arthur Proctor as P.C. Tibbott and Mr John Mayall as Detective Pollard. Miss Gertrude Price played with feeling and force as Mary Stannard, and Miss Minnie Ethel showed intelligence as Little Davy. Mr Witty Watty Walton as Tat Spavvin, the railway porter, had a character in which he fairly revelled. He certainly succeeded in making the audience laugh heartily, and his ditty "Woman's in It" was received with much applause. He had a merry companion in Miss Annie Megson, who acted brightly and cleverly as Suzette, a little French girl, who introduced a song and dance. Miss Iris M. Ward was good as the Hindoo girl who makes herself understood chiefly by expressive gestures. The drama, which was carefully staged, was accorded a flattering reception on Monday night.

Characters in the Play.

The Rev. Alan Grey	Mr George Rowlands

First played at the Theatre Royal, Accrington, last December, The Sin of Her Childhood has since had a successful provincial tour. Well spiced with sensation and with a strong flavouring of comedy, Mr J. A. Campbell's drama has found favour with numerous audiences, who have placed upon it the hall-mark of their approval. A crime committed by a young girl, who foolishly yields to the persuasions of her selfish, callous brother, supplies the title to the play. The name of this girl is Mary, and she is the daughter of Farmer Haysel, who has married twice. By his second wife he has a daughter named Nancy, who, through the neglect of her drunken mother, sustains an injury in infancy. The doctor called in says it is necessary that the child shall be sent abroad to restore her health, and the farmer informs his son Stephen that he will have to leave college at once. The young man is not disposed to sacrifice his prospects for the sake of an invalid cripple child, and he induces his little sister Mary to place poison in some gruel prepared for Nancy. After a lapse of ten years we find Mary in a reformatory, where she has undergone punishment for her sin. Her term of confinement is on the eve of expiration, but, alas! she has no home to go to. The matron of the reformatory is her drunken stepmother, who behaves cruelly to the girl, informing her that she will not be allowed to leave the place. A visitor, the Rev. Alan Grey, expresses a wish to see Mary alone, and the minister proves to be a friend in need. Another visitor to the reformatory is Dr. Henry Granger, who, however, is no other than the brother who has caused all the unhappiness which has befallen Mary. But when she greets him with sisterly affection he repudiates the girl, and pretends he has no knowledge of her. However, Mary is eventually engaged as governess in Stephen's house, she having the charge of his adopted son Eric, who is possessed of £5,000. Stephen covets this money, and attempts to persuade Mary to commit a second crime and murder the child, but she refuses. The minister again proves himself to be her friend, and at his suggestion she enters a religious institution. The adopted son of Stephen is the little nephew of his deceased wife, whom he murdered because she refused to pay his debts. The villain attempts to poison the child himself, hoping to fix the crime upon Mary; but his late wife's brother, John Thornton, intervenes, and prevents the commission of the murder. The scene of the third act is the Exterior of the Church of the Protestant Sisterhood, and here Alan Grey asks Mary to become his wife; but she refuses, reminding him of "the sin of her childhood." John Thornton demands an explanation of his sister's death from Stephen, and also extorts from him a confession that he instigated the murder of his stepsister seven years ago. The drama has been well played by the members of Mr Samuel James's stock company. Miss Inez Bensusan gives an admirable portrayal of Mary Haysel, truthfully depicting the varied emotions of the girl who suffers so severely for "the sin of her childhood." She succeeds in arousing the sympathies of the audience. Miss Mara Collings plays the part of Maria Haysel in a manner that deserves the highest praise. Mr J. J. Bartlett gives an incisive impersonation of Stephen Haysel, and meets with deserved success. Mr George Rowlands scores in the part of the genuine, good-hearted minister, Alan Grey, and Mr W. S. Hartford shows firmness and power in the part of Captain Thornton. Mr Alfred Donohoe gets a lot of fun out of the part of Barney O'Reilly. Miss Bessie Frank is amusing as Eliza Muggins, and Miss Nellie Le Breton is capital as the street arab, Hannah Spry, and she sings a couple of songs with the happiest results. Miss Margery Villis plays cleverly as little Eric Dugdale, also appearing as Little Mary in the prologue. Mr Alfred Holles does well as Thomas Haysel, and other minor rôles are carefully embodied by Mr Edward Boddy, Mr G. Travener, Mr John Berry, and others. The play is produced under the stage direction of Mr John Henderson.

SHAKESPEARE, CLAPHAM-JUNCTION.

On Monday, Oct. 31, the Drama, in Four Acts, by Walter Melville, entitled "THE WORST WOMAN IN LONDON."

The visit of the above well-known author's own company to this commodious theatre this week has been a decided success, the piece being well staged and well acted. Miss Constance Medwyn in the title-rôle gave a powerful and artistic rendering of the part, her acting in act three, scene four, with Armstrong, the ruined gambler—excellently portrayed by Mr Bernard Mervyn—being really thrilling in its intensity. The part of the befooled husband is excellently acted by Mr Roy Byford, the discarded and broken-hearted daughter is ably represented by Miss Lillian Rose, and Ruth's lover, Jack Felton, is played satisfactorily by Mr E. J. Collins. Mr Joe Bracewell as the father of the Worst Woman is very amusing, and the fun is also kept going by Mr Geo. H. Asquin as Bob Goldfinch and Miss Helena Rigby as Matilda Parker. Mr Alf Ruskin makes a capital policeman, Master F. Livingstone is a funny little stable boy, Mr B. Elton a satisfactory detective, Mr C. Thomas a good sweep, and Mrs Paul Barry Lewers a satisfactory villain.

BRIXTON THEATRE.

On Monday, Oct. 31, the Drama, in Four Acts, by Arthur Shirley and Benjamin Landeck, entitled "TOMMY ATKINS."

Active service has been seen by Tommy Atkins since its first production at the Pavilion Theatre nine years ago, and by playgoers in every part of the kingdom its merits have been acclaimed. Wholesome in sentiment, stirring in action, and full of the best constituents of melodrama, its powers of attraction are as vigorous as ever—a fact that has been attested at Brixton this week by the crowded audiences that have flocked to the handsome theatre each evening and have become absorbed in its exciting story, its deep pathos, and its frequent fun. The play is illustrated by admirable set pieces, each one presenting a realistic representation of the scene, whether it is the pastoral simplicity of a country church or a field of battle in the Soudan. An imposing spectacle is made of the church parade in act two, for which a military band is in attendance, and the smartness and precision with which the movement is executed excites loud cheers. Skilled artistes are employed in the interpretation of the drama, which is presented by Mr Milton Bode's company—an assurance in itself of excellent work. Mr Frederick Ross has the part of Harold Wilson, and his acting carries distinction whether in the rôle of parson or private soldier. He appears to particular advantage as the champion of the oppressed, and the noble lines of the part are delivered with admirable fervour by Mr Ross, who has a voice which lends itself to impassioned declamation while the actor thrills the audience by his fire and intensity. Miss Lola Patey brings into prominence the profound pathos of the character of Ruth Raymond. Gifted with exceptional powers of elocution, Miss Patey makes an uncommon appeal to the sympathies as the wronged woman whose happiness is threatened at every turn, and the touching characteristics of the rôle are artistically expressed. Mr George C. Doughty varies his villainy as Captain Richard Maitland with callous cynicism and a sense of humour that animates his actions as well as his words, and makes himself a thorough-paced scoundrel such as is inseparable from melodrama. Every commendation is due to the Private Mason of Mr Chas. A. Wenman, who gives a well-studied portrait of the escaped criminal bound by ties of fear to his superior officer. His assumption of terror at the thought of having murdered Ruth Raymond is remarkably well done, and throughout his performance betokens the practised actor. Mr John Nolan wins the esteem of the audience as Sergeant Paddy Molloy, whose stock of witticisms has been replenished, and has an irresistible effect on his hearers, who are kept in constant laughter while he is on the stage. No less provocative of mirth is Mr Billy Harman, who makes a truly eccentric personage of Ebenezer Skindle, displaying a wonderful agility in his humorous antics that have the effect desired. Miss Ethel Tinsley affects the shrewish propensities of Kate Perkins with a good grace, making the most of the comic scenes with Sergt. Molloy, especially after she has become his better-half, and playing with unforced humour. A captivating Elsie Wilson is presented by Miss Florrie Vickers, who acts with ingenuous charm in her love-making with Captain Robert Sparrow, a part that is gallantly rendered by Mr Reginald Holmes. Mr Maurice Drew gives a powerful characterisation of the inflexible Stephen Raymond, acting with strength and sincerity; Mr Henry C. Parsons is a good exponent of Private Harris; Miss Kitty Omer makes a personable bride as Rose Selwyn; Mr Augustus Hammond does very well as Thomas Trotman; Mr Fred Barclay is seen as an Arab chief; and the long cast is completed by Misses Kate Priddis, Marie Fontaine, Messrs E. Christopher, Cecil F. Phillips, and Master Philip Priddis.

OPERA HOUSE, CROUCH-END.

On Monday, Oct. 31, the Comedy Opera, "MY LADY MOLLY."

Mr Arthur Hart's company is here on a return visit. Both staging and costumes are excellent. The attractiveness of the piece is proved by the fact that the musical items were on Monday continually redemanded. Miss Mabel Lait played the title-rôle with fascinating archness. Miss Maud Thorne made an impressive and charming Alice Coverdale. Miss Sybil Thorne was a piquant and pleasing lady's maid, Hester, and her Irish jig with the captain's servant was a palpable hit. As the French governess, Mdlle. Mirabeau, Miss Lottie Sargent was seen to advantage. Mr George Grundy was well to the front in his impersonation of Captain Romney. Mr Frank Stather may be congratulated on a very successful rendering of Lionel Bland. The bluff old squire of earlier days was well portrayed by Mr Frederick Hobbs, with a humorous element suitably introduced. The representative of the Emerald Isle, Micky O'Dowd, had justice done in the person of Mr Arthur Powell, his spirited performance eliciting flattering remarks. Mr T. Norbury's swell part of Reuben Oats, the landlord, was made the most of, Mr David N. Miller as Judge Romney deserves a word of recognition, and the several minor characters were carefully looked after. The well-trained chorus and the augmented orchestra, under the direction of Mr Carlton Mason, added to the success of the performance.

NEW EALING THEATRE.

On Monday, Oct. 31, the Play, in Four Acts, by J. M. Barrie, entitled "QUALITY STREET."

This quaint and fascinating play was performed here on Monday by Messrs Addison Bright and Walter Maxwell's first-class company. Mr Geo. A. Brandram made a capital Valentine Brown, and played with feeling; Mr Arthur C. F. Lysons was very amusing as the dandy Ensign Blades; Miss Florence Jackson was conspicuous in the rôle of Phœbe Throssel, which she hit off in a highly commendable style; Miss Gwynneth Galton was good as Polly, making quite a typical maid; the Susan Throssel of Miss Grace Edwin was a creditable piece of acting, she creating much laughter in the school lesson scene; Miss Marie Dennett scored as Fanny Willoughby; and the Misses Frances Leslie and Lillian Rogers played well in their respective parts of Henrietta Turnbull and Charlotte Parratt. Mr Dan Dyer as the Recruiting Sergeant did useful work. Master Ernest Hollom was good as the bullying youth, Arthur Wellesley Tomson. In respect of scenery and stage appointments nothing was lacking.

THE CROWN, PECKHAM.

On Monday, Oct. 31, "THE BELLE OF NEW YORK."

"They always follow me," laments the Belle in her first song, but she must, nevertheless, have been gratified at the large number of followers assembled to greet her yet once again at the Crown on Monday last. Mr George Musgrove's very excellent company has now visited Peckham something like a dozen times, and always with the same degree of success. Mr Harry Meymott continues to be an ideal Ichabod Bronson, revelling in the humour of the character, and winning great approval for his latest ditties. Mr Philip Leslie is a taking Harry Bronson,

Mr Max Copland is admirable as the polite lunatic. Mr Cecil Burt as Doc Snifkins, Mr Paddy Dupres as Kenneth Mugg, Mr Alfred Selby and Mr Albert Seely as the twins, Mr Charles Anson as Twiddles, and Mr Charles Wakeman as William retain their original freshness, and Mr Frank Lawton is the same inimitable Blinky Bill. He has added several popular melodies to his répertoire, and if anything could prevail with the ubiquitous "Bill Bailey" it would surely be the alluring whistling of Mr Lawton. Miss Beatrice Lamotte as the Belle wins the usual applause for each number she sings. Miss Lillian Digges is a chic and very French Fifi, Miss Winnie Brown is a handsome queen of comic opera, and Miss May Angus Young a smart little Maimie Clancy. The chorus singing retains its freshness and precision, whilst the tout ensemble is excellent.

BOROUGH THEATRE, STRATFORD.

"FLORODORA."

Musical compositions always prove welcome at the Stratford Borough Theatre, and consequently Florodora, although having been seen here several times before, is this week meeting with every success. Cyrus Gilfain is safely entrusted to Mr Fred Winn, who plays the part with all the unctuousness demanded and with a subtle humour which is highly mirth-provoking. Mr Leonard Russell sings in manly and pleasing style as Frank Abercoed, gaining many encomiums for his rendering of "The Shade of the Palm," for which encore verses are demanded. Mr J. Paul Callan makes a most acceptable Captain Arthur Donegal, albeit a more spirited rendering would be an improvement. Mr William Rousell as the sinister-looking Leandro is capital, and Gilfain's clerks have quite competent representatives in Messrs Arthur Duffield, Martin Pitts, Edward Tonge, V. S. Huntley, Arthur Metcalfe, and H. Mathews. The part of Tweedlepunch is undertaken by Mr Edward Lewis, whose original methods of portraying this favourite character meet with general approval, his witticisms and drollery being provocative of great laughter and applause. Miss Lena Maitland makes a very graceful Dolores, and sings delightfully. Miss Isabelle Dillon is a vivacious and coquettish Lady Holyrood, whose songs are rendered with point and piquancy, the up-to-date topical allusions in "I've an Inkling" being received with éclat. Angela Gilfain has a pretty and demure representative in Miss Hilda Dugdale, and Valeda is brightly played by Miss Lydia Granville. Angela's friends have charming representatives in Miss Dollie Neville, Miss M. Woodward, Miss Maud Stead, Miss Daisy Burrows, Miss May Sember, and Miss Muriel Marsden. The double sextet, "Tell me, pretty maiden," remains an important and attractive feature of the production. The well-trained chorus render the concerted numbers admirably, and together with the augmented orchestra, under the bâton of Mr Ashley Richards, tends to produce a tout ensemble of considerable merit. Mr Tom B. Davis's interests are well looked after by his affable business-manager, Mr F. Martin Morris.

BROADWAY THEATRE, S.E.

On Monday, Oct. 31, the Drama entitled
"OLD HEIDELBERG."

Mr Mouillot's company, including Mr George F. Tully, Mr Clifford Bown, and Miss Katherine Pole, commenced a six nights' engagement here on Monday, and had a hearty reception from a considerable house. Mr George F. Tully presents an altogether admirable study of the character of Carl Heinrich, Prince of Sachsen. Mr Clifford Bown's Doctor Juttner was a most enjoyable performance, full of pathos and rich humour. Mr Lionel Gadsden was remarkably good as Lutz. Mr F. M. Cross as Hofmarschall Von Passarge is excellent, as is Mr W. Prince Wells as Baron Von Metzing. Mr Wallace C. Court as Graf Von Asterberg acts and sings well. Miss Katherine Pole is a delightful Kathie, and played her share of the final scene with great earnestness and power. The remaining parts were all capitally sustained.

GRAND, WOOLWICH.

On Monday, Oct. 31, the Play, in Three Acts, entitled
"THE BROKEN MELODY."

Mr Auguste Van Biene and company have been drawing good houses here this week with an excellent representation of The Broken Melody. Mr Van Biene is, of course, a host in himself; he is now playing Paul Borinski for well over the two thousandth time, and far from evincing any "staleness" (so likely a fault in the circumstances) his characterisation is distinguished by remarkable freshness of execution as well as by a clearness of definition, both in outline and in detail, attainable only by long practice. On Mr Van Biene's skill with his favourite 'cello it is surely unnecessary to enlarge at this time of day. Suffice to say that he is fully up to and occasionally surpasses the high standard already set by his former performances in this direction. Miss Lena Burnleigh's rendering of Mabel, Borinski's wife, is marked by a sympathetic insight into the character of this whole-hearted woman, and by a tenderness of diction and action which is most effective. She is, perhaps, at her best in the scene in the second act where Mabel has to deny that Paul is her husband, or that she even knows him. An exceedingly clever performance of the rôle of the Duchess of Verviers is contributed by Miss Ida Chapman, whose distinguished voice and manner and general suavity of demeanour are in welcome contrast to the "high falutin'" style usually adopted in portraying characters of this nature. Miss Avis Graham gives a clever little sketch of Mrs Dixon, and Miss Morton is amusing as the Hon. Mrs Spinacher. Mr Arthur Bawtree is well suited as General Ivanoff, his soldierly bearing and resonant voice adding to the value of his impersonation. The comic part of Dudley Mortimer is entrusted to Mr T. P. Hayner, and could not have been in better hands. His power of humorous facial expression is wonderful, and his sayings and doings are responsible for much genuine mirth. Mr E. Laceby makes the most of his chances as Dixon, the lodging-house keeper, and Messrs J. Cummings, H. Ludlow, and E. Edwards do well in the small parts allotted to them.

COUNTY THEATRE, KINGSTON.

On Monday, the Musical Play, in Two Acts, by George Dance, entitled
"A CHINESE HONEYMOON."

Mr Geo. Dance's company opened a week's engagement here on Monday evening, and though many of those present had doubtless witnessed the play on former occasions, it was, judging by their reception of it, as welcome as ever it was. Chief honours were awarded to Miss Jose Collins for her captivating assumption of the part of Mrs Pineapple, her singing and dancing gaining for her several well-deserved encores. As her elderly spouse, Mr Pineapple, Mr Harry Brayne showed himself a comedian of no mean order, and was able, with very little apparent effort, to keep his audience in the best of humours when he was on the stage. The part of the absurd and grotesque waitress, Fi-Fi, was filled by Miss M. Sadie with great success. Miss Marie Adair made a charming Princess Soo-Soo, whilst Mr Percy Yorke acquitted himself with distinction as Tom Hatherton. A word of commendation was also deserved by Mr Frank A. Wood as the Emperor, by Mr P. Allerton Turner as Chipple-Chop, the Lord Chancellor; by Mr Leonard May as Hi-Lung, the Lord High Admiral; and by Miss Alice Drummond as Mrs Brown. Nothing was lacking in the mounting of the play, the dresses and the scenery leaving nothing to be desired. A full chorus and an augmented orchestra were under the direction of Mr Ernest Hurman.

MR WILLIAM GILLETTE will return to London in March or April next year, and will appear in a new play from his own pen entitled Clarette, the scene of which is laid in North Carolina.

Mr Arthur Bourchier has achieved a complete and incontestable success by a combination of judgment, earnestness, and "pluck," but the greatest of these, in the case of The Walls of Jericho, which he produced at the Garrick Theatre on Monday evening, was "pluck." For, certainly, the point of the piece was "right up against" a great many of Mr Bourchier's first-night patrons, whose smiles, as Mr Sutro held the mirror up to the nature of the "smart" set in society, were somewhat sickly and uncomfortable. Mr Bourchier had not only to carry the scent of Mr Sutro's satire across the footlights, as Mr Pinero tried to send the odour of haymaking in one of his plays, but over the half guinea seats as well. The Walls of Jericho is the strongest attack on "smart" society which has been made on the stage for a long time. It is built on the same good old hard-wearing principles as Still Waters Run Deep and other works of the last generation; and it is worked out with a thorough knowledge and appreciation of the modern tone.

It is extremely difficult to write the dialogue of a modern society play. Some dramatists have got over the obstacle by brilliant epigrams such as are laughed at and quoted, but are never heard from the lips of "smart" people. Mr Sutro's lines are, with due allowance made for the theatrical focus, quite possible and probable. He has hit off correctly the flashy cynicism, the facile foolishness, and the petty paradox which are generally admired in modern conversation; and thus he has created an atmosphere for his play of the most cleverly convincing kind. He is particularly good in his treatment of situations so subtle as to present pitfalls to the less expert artist. For instance, the familiar "declaration" scene between the married woman and the lover in the second act of the play is made fresh and novel by the super-sensual attitude of Lady Alethea and the idea of the brilliant lady-killer made positively dull by the influence of his animalism—there is no passion, says Sterne, which is so essentially serious. But Mr Sutro's play is full of admirable notions such as this. It will for this reason bear seeing again and again, as some of its more delicate details may have been overlooked in the stress and vigour of its action.

Jack Frobisher is a variant on the familiar stage type of the society millionaire. He has made a large fortune by sheep-farming in Queensland, where he has distinguished himself as a fighter, as a philanthropist, as a builder of bridges, and as a founder of townships. Coming "home" to spend his money, he has fallen in love with and has married Alethea, the daughter of the poor and dissipated Marquis of Steventon. She goes her way, which leads through unlimited "bridge" and constant flirtation with a lady-killer called Harry Dallas; and Frobisher finds himself a "nobody" in his own house and in his wife's social circle, while his father-in-law borrows money of him and patronises him. Lord Drayton, the Marquis's son, seduces a young lady who is his sister's companion. He comes to Frobisher for advice; and the Queenslander gives him £3,000 and an Australian farm to "marry the girl" and go out with her to the Antipodes. This action brings affairs to a crisis; and Frobisher asserts himself "all round." He commands his wife instead of imploring her; and, when the old Marquis takes the high and mighty tone with respect to his son's marriage, he receives such a complete "dressing down" from his son-in-law that he departs quite crestfallen. Dallas tries to take liberties with Lady Alethea, and is forced by Frobisher to open and read aloud a compromising letter which the lady-killer has written to her in apology. Then Frobisher deals with his wife. He denounces the "fast" set in which she lives, her disregard of his wishes, and her heartless neglect of their child. Finally, he tells her that he has resolved to sell his English property and take her out with him to Queensland. Of course, she refuses point blank to go; but at the eleventh hour—when he is on the point of starting alone—she relents, and consents to accompany him, leaving it an open question whether Queensland will convert her to commonsense and the domestic virtues, or whether she will introduce the fashion of female gambling and easy-going adultery into Australian society.

The parts of Jack Frobisher and Lady Alethea Frobisher were exactly suited to Mr Arthur Bourchier and Miss Violet Vanbrugh, who have seldom been more happily cast. Mr Bourchier's stalwart figure and strong and powerful style were admirably adapted to the interpretation of the burly and resolute Queenslander, and he acted throughout with unforced energy, vigorous earnestness, and sternly effective emphasis. Miss Violet Vanbrugh looked subtly fascinating and artistically fashionable as Lady Alethea, and played the part with a delicacy of appreciation and a discriminating tact which made her impersonation as real and vivid as it was interesting and amusing. The modern "smart" woman, with all her characteristics, has seldom been more strikingly sketched than in this instance; and Miss Vanbrugh certainly met the author half-way by her very clever rendering of his work. Mr Sydney Valentine, as a sentimental gold-digger who marries into the "smart" set, in spite of the warning given to him by his friends' troubles, acted with his usual ease and ability; and Mr O. B. Clarence's Marquis of Steventon was distinguished by a senile "stylishness" which was very effective, and equally removed from colourlessness and caricature. Mr David Domville took full advantage of his brief opportunity as Lord Drayton; and Mr H. Nye Chart represented, with great skill the type which was once commonly referred to as the "masher." Miss Kate Serjeantson as Lady Westerby gave a most agreeable impersonation of a clever woman of the world with a heart beneath her chiffonerrie; Miss Elfrida Clement played Miss Mornington with great crispness and chic; Miss Lena Halliday was excellent as the card-sharping Duchess of Matlock; and Miss Muriel Beaumont depicted a worldly ingénue with remarkable tact and truth. All the minor rôles had careful and competent representatives; and Mr Harford's scenery, and Mr Sydney Valentine's assistance to Mr Bourchier in the production of the play, completed the success of The Walls of Jericho. The applause at the close was hearty and unanimous, and Mr Bourchier, coming forward with his hand on his heart, said that Mr Sutro was in the house, but was affected with a complaint uncommon in actors and authors—excessive modesty. Mr Bourchier, however, promised to convey to him the favourable verdict of the audience, whom he thanked for their attendance, and for the assistance which they had enabled him to give to the victims of the recent unfortunate Dogger Bank disaster.

MR W. T. LOVELL was engaged by Miss Olga Nethersole for her production at the Shaftesbury Theatre, but she released him to join Mr Edward Terry on his American tour in December.

ROYAL OPERA, COVENT-GARDEN.

Cavalleria Rusticana and Pagliacci have been often performed together, and on Wednesday these two operas attracted an enormous crowd, filling every corner of the Opera House where standing-room could be obtained. In Mascagni's opera the most attractive feature was Madame Giachetti's Santuzza, a powerful dramatic and vocal study which has rarely been equalled by any modern prima donna. Madame Giachetti perhaps found some difficulty with the music, but she is such a fine artiste that she conquered these difficulties with the greatest ease. Signor Anselmi was heard at his best as the faithless Turiddu, and he acted extremely well. Signor Sammarco made an excellent Alfio, and Madame Ferraris as Lola was thoroughly efficient. The opera throughout went remarkably well, and the dramatic Pagliacci even better, Signor Caruso as Canio being more effective as the deceived husband than any tenor we have previously seen in the part. Signor Caruso, both in acting and singing, gave the utmost expression, passion, and tenderness to the various scenes. Signor Sammarco was magnificent as Tonio. His delivery of the prologue caused quite a sensation, and he was compelled to appear four or five times before the curtain could be raised for the opera to proceed. Madame Wayda represented Nedda with considerable effect, but she hardly impressed the audience so much as her masculine associates. But generally she succeeded fairly, and was well received. In other respects the performance was satisfactory, and the band and chorus, familiar with the music, gave Signor Campanini no trouble. Every fresh representation seems to increase the reputation of the admirable San Carlo company. It is many a year since we have had such autumn opera performances at Covent-garden.

MISS EDITH GRENFELL.

years past in the United States. It will shortly be presented by the authors at a London theatre, with new scenery and effects. The piece is taken from the same source as Vilma, in which Miss Lewis Waller has been appearing. A third version, entitled Nadia, by Lady Violet Greville, was produced at the Lyric Theatre in May, 1892. In this instance Mr Arthur Bourchier played Count Rezof, and the unfortunate heroine was depicted by Miss Olga Brandon.

150th NIGHT OF "SERGEANT BRUE."

The 150th performance of Madame Liza Lehmann and Mr J. Hickory Wood's amusing piece with the above title, which took place at the Prince of Wales's Theatre on Wednesday, gave us a second opportunity of admiring the brightness, the fun, and the merry music which the collaborateurs have provided. The career of Sergeant Brue since its production at the Strand Theatre on June 14 last has been continously successful, and, in its new home, it is as popular and prosperous as ever. Some important alterations have been made in the cast since the first night, Miss Madge Lessing being now the representative of Aurora Brue. Miss Lessing, with her ripe Southern beauty, her arch and winning style, her graceful poses, and her daintv and accomplished dancing, quite bewitches the audience. She shares with Mr Farren Soutar the honours of a new song and dance, "Joseph, James, and John," which have been inserted in the first act. It is extremely quaint, and its originality and oddity prove irresistible. Another new-comer to the cast is Miss Jessica Lait, whose depiction of the little servant Daisy is full of briskness, point, and movement, and who hits off the Cockney character very cleverly. The Mabel Widgett is now Miss Nina Wood, who looks remarkably ingenuous and pretty, and by her charming acting and pleasing vocalism makes herself an immense favourite with the audience. Mr Arthur Appleby's Gerald Treherne is effectively individual, and suggests capacity for even more exacting work; and Mr Arthur Laceby as the Crawlborough-street magistrate, Mr Crank, is thoroughly efficient and satisfactory. Miss Millie Legarde as Lady Bickenhall is crisp, chic, and expressive; and gives a reading of the rôle which is both original and appropriate. Mr Willie Edouin repeats his deliciously comical and absolutely natural embodiment of the good-natured Sergeant of Police; and its drollery, its eccentricity, and its technical thoroughness show no signs of abatement. Mr Arthur Williams's Crookie Scrubbs is as exquisitely and dryly humorous as ever, the actor's facial play and comic business in dumb show being as artistic and laughter-provoking as ever. Mr Farren Soutar sustains with unflagging vivacity and excellent tact the part of Michael Brue; and the minor rôles are all ably enacted. The piece, as a whole, has been much improved during its run, the alterations and additions which have been made being both judicious and beneficial. This musical farce is one of the most amusing, most merry and active, and most inoffensive entertainments which is now being offered to the London public; and its success has proved that playgoers can enjoy honest fun and clever workmanship without any infusion of impropriety or suggestiveness. There can be little doubt that Sergeant Brue took a "new lease of life" when it went to the Prince of Wales's Theatre.

"JOHN BULL'S OTHER ISLAND."

A New and Unpublished Play, in Four Acts, by Bernard Shaw,
Produced at a Matinée at the Court Theatre, on Nov. 1.

Broadbent	Mr LOUIS CALVERT
Larry Doyle	Mr J. L. SHINE
Tim Haffigan	Mr PERCIVAL STEVENS
Hodson	Mr NIGEL PLAYFAIR
Keegan	Mr GRANVILLE BARKER
Patsy Farrell	Mr GRAHAM BROWNE
Father Dempsey	Mr CHARLES DALY
Corney Doyle	Mr F. CREMLIN
Barney Doran	Mr WILFRED SHINE
Matthew Haffigan	Mr A. E. GEORGE
Aunt Judy	Miss AGNES THOMAS
Nora	Miss ELLEN O'MALLEY

Mr Bernard Shaw is, we imagine, incorrigible; in any case, as a playwright, he is impossible. Here is a man with acute perceptions, a flow of real humour, and a bright imagination—"instead of which," he goes about writing irrational "hotch-potch"—as like John Bull's Island, which was produced at a matinée at the Court Theatre on Tuesday last. We are weary of the analysis and exposition of Mr Shaw's work; we must fall back on simple description.

The action opens in the office of Broadbent and Doyle, civil engineers. Broadbent is a caricature of the average Englishman—honest, energetic, impulsive, and intensely self-satisfied. Doyle, an Irishman, is a mixture of qualities. He has kept a "nice" girl named Nora hanging on in Roscullen for eighteen years in the hope that he will propose to her, and has neither broken of the connection nor made her his wife. Broadbent believes in the future of Ireland, and he and his friend agree to go out to Doyle's native place and study the national characteristics.

So far, so rational. In the second act Mr Shaw pulls out the crazy stop. A pallid and imbecile gentleman, who formerly belonged to the priesthood and is subject to delusions, has a long conversation with a grasshopper, in which the uncomfortable conclusion is arrived at that this world is Hell. A comic Irish peasant comes from behind a big boulder, and implores the ex-priest not to send the grasshopper to haunt him o' nights. Broadbent arrives without his friend, sees Nora near a certain Round Tower under the moonlight, falls in love with her and tells her so. She says that he has drunk too much punch, and sees him, amiably, home. In the third act there is a meeting of villagers to choose a local candidate for the next election. Larry Doyle, who is asked to stand, gives a statement of his opinions. He says that the farmer tenants who have become small proprietors under the Land Acts are harder, greedier, and meaner than the old absentee landlords; and that he would like to have a law made to prevent the new men paying their labourers less than a pound a week. He would also establish the Roman Catholic Church, and thus make it practically powerless; for Established Churches are helpless, while Noncomformists are combative and to be dreaded. Doyle is rejected as impossible, and Broadbent, after some conventional electioneering oratory, is chosen as the coming candidate.

In order to win the hearts of the electors, he tries to convey a pig belonging to one of them to the latter's house on a motor-car. The pig escapes, and is run over, the car doing much damage to the villagers and the village. In the last act, Broadbent finds Nora weeping because Doyle does not propose to her, and seizes the opportunity of pressing his own suit. She accepts him, and in the next scene gives her laggard swain a good "talking to." Then the crazy stop comes out again. The imbecile ex-priest maunders at some length about Capital invading the peaceful country-side, about certain Trinitarian and Socialistic visions, and about the absurdity of any hope of real Progress. Broadbent's candidature is, however, unaffected, and his plans for bringing gold and golf into the place remain unaltered.

Mr Louis Calvert's Broadbent was the mainstay of the production. He was an ideal representative of the rôle, which he played with sterling ability and admirable command of technique. Mr J. L. Shine was almost inaudible in the first act, but became more distinct in delivery as he went on, and gave a peculiar and subtle interpretation of the character sketch, in which, let us hope Mr Shaw has libelled his countrymen. Mr Percival Stevens contributed an effective and energetic embodiment of an Irish ex-tenant with a standing grievance; and Mr Nigel Playfair was excellent as Hodson, Mr Granville Barker, by his "eerie" manner and impressive utterance, quelling all impeding ridicule as the insane ex-priest. Mr Graham Browne's Patsey Farrell was a natural and humorous assumption, and Mr Charles Daly was judiciously efficient as Father Dempsey, Mr F. Cremlin giving an easy, unforced, and faithful sketch of an Irish type as Corney Doyle. Mr Wilfred Shine's Barney Doran was another admirable little study, and Miss Agnes Thomas's Aunt Judy and Miss Ellen O'Malley's Nora had the freshness and direct inspiration which often compensate for absence of experience. It must be stated of the performances of all the minor parts that they had an air of reality and first-hand observation which made them genuinely interesting and artistic. There was hearty applause at the conclusion of the performance, but Mr Shaw had left the house. The Court Theatre looked remarkably bright and pretty, and the management by Mr J. E. Vedrenne leaves little to be desired.

COVENT-GARDEN BALL.

The third of this season's fancy dress balls, arranged by Mr Frank Rendle and Mr Neil Forsyth at Covent-garden, was held on the night of the 28th ult. The attendance was again large, and the prizes were both numerous and valuable. One of the dresses which attracted most notice was that called "Trafalgar's Day," which gained the second prize (lady's). It was of white satin, and on it were various beautifully-painted panels depicting "The Victory in Portsmouth Harbour," "A naval fight in the time of Nelson," and "The Death of Nelson." On the bodice was a painting of the Hero of Trafalgar surrounded by a wreath of laurels, the frozen leaves of which were illuminated by electric lights. A miniature Nelson's Column formed the head-dress. The design was Mr W. Clarkson's, as was a "Firework Fantasia," a red satin gown with chiffon flounces, painted with different set pieces in fireworks. A finely lit "golden rain" head-dress effectively completed the idea. Mr Clarkson also won a first prize (gent.'s) for a novel dress entitled "The Rajah of Ceylon," and several other prizes for 'Carmencita," "Spring Flowers," &c. The best of Madame Jeanne's creations was "Winter in the Rockies," a costume of white velvet adorned with hand-paintings. A cape of electric blue velvet hung from the shoulders, and the hat was wing-shaped and of silver fringe. The dress was besprinkled with numerous coloured glow lamps. The electric light was used in the dress of "The Beautiful White Devil," and "Blue and Yellow Folly" and 'The Rising Sun" also had points of beauty and artistic merit. After parading in front of the judges the competitors moved in procession across the stage, and everyone present had a good view of all the best dresses. An excellent programme of music was rendered by Lieut. Dan Godfrey's orchestra of eighty skilled musicians.

MESSRS LUSH AND COOK, LIMITED, the enterprising theatrical cleaners of 91, Mount-street, are working at very high pressure preparing for the annual feast of pantomime. During the past few weeks this firm have cleaned dresses for the following London pantos:—Theatre Royal Drury-lane, Pavilion Theatre, E., Coronet Theatre, Kennington Theatre, Camden Theatre, Crown Theatre, and the King's Theatre, also very heavy consignments from the provinces. The growth of Messrs Lush and Cook's theatrical business speaks volumes for the excellence of the work done by this firm.

THE ACTORS' BENEVOLENT FUND.

HOW TO HELP IT.

The Actors' Benevolent Fund, as some people may remember, was originally started with the idea of its being supported and maintained entirely by actors and managers. After a few years, however, it was found that the subscriptions of the individual actors and managers were totally insufficient to enable the committee to relieve all the distress that existed. It was, therefore, decided to have an annual dinner, at which the public would be asked to assist. Owing to the generosity of the public at the dinners and matinées the Fund has been able to assist a great many more needy "professionals" than would otherwise have been the case.

Mr C. I. Coltson, the secretary, to whose unbounded energy much of the success of the Fund is due, informs us that the subscriptions of actors have during the past few months fallen off considerably. Probably the depressing state of touring has contributed largely to this condition of things. We all know that matters in connection with travelling companies have been deplorably bad during the past few months as far as the financial aspect is concerned, and if there be a continuance, very heavy calls are likely to be upon the Actors' Benevolent Fund. But even at the present moment the institution requires all the monetary support it can possibly obtain. Some of the principal members of the profession are performing a good service by selling their autographs and forwarding the proceeds to the Actors' Benevolent Fund. There are, however, several prominent actors and actresses who give their signatures free of charge. Might we suggest to these ladies and gentlemen the pressing needs of their less happily placed brothers and sisters, many of whom are practicaly entirely dependent upon the Actors' Benevolent Fund for their very subsistence? We feel sure that, if a minimum charge of sixpence were imposed upon autograph collectors, a goodly sum of money would be handed over to the fund. We hear that the demand for theatrical autographs is on the increase, and if actors and actresses will kindly follow the example of Sir Henry Irving, Sir Charles Wyndham, Mr Beerbohm Tree, Mr Lewis Waller, and others, the result would undoubtedly be an addition of several hundred pounds a year available for charitable distribution. The system put into practice by Mr Beerbohm Tree is this:—On receiving an application for his autograph, he replies to the effect that if a sum of half-a-crown is sent to the secretary of the A.B.F., his signature and a receipt for the money will follow in due course.

Then there is the question of free admissions to theatres. In America this affords a prolific source of revenue to the theatrical charities, a tax of sixpence being met by every non-paying visitor. We suggest that English managers should charge the same sum. If this amount were collected from each person admitted free to a performance, a very considerable amount of money would accrue during the course of the year to the benefit of suffering artists. Surely it would be a very simple matter for every theatre in the United Kingdom to adopt such a rule as that here suggested. Mr Walter Reynolds, of the Theatre Royal, Leeds, was a great collector of this class of tax, and helped the Fund very much, while only last week the Fund received £5 from Mr Robert Arthur, being a tax on theatrical free admission to Kennington Theatre, per Harold Entwistle; £2 14s. 4d. from Mr Cecil Beryl, Theatre Royal, Brighton; and £1 4s. 3d. from Palace Pier, Brighton, per Mr Drew Mackintosh, these amounts being obtained by means of a small tax on free admission. Excellent examples to follow.

We have before referred to the performances which are given in aid of hospitals and other charities disassociated from the theatrical profession, and we have before pointed out whenever an artiste is asked to contribute his or her services for the benefit of some charitable object a bargain should be struck to the effect that ten per cent. of the receipts should be placed to the credit of the A.B.F., and in this way the benevolent offices of the Fund would be greatly increased. We fail to see what difficulty there is in making such a plan universal and effective. And when one reflects on the immense resources at the easy disposal of the dramatic profession, and the advantages it commands in the way of securing the cash of the charitably disposed, it seems almost ridiculous that the Actors' Benevolent Fund should be obliged to be constantly appealing for donations. Cannot managers and proprietors of theatres throughout the country arrange an annual matinée for the benefit of an institution from which even they themselves—or some of them—may at a future date be compelled to invoke temporary financial assistance? It is only when dark shadows cross our path that we begin to realise what other people in their poverty have suffered. It is then, too, that we begin to realise how much we might have done in the past that has not been done. Is it wise, is it just, is it right for those of us with our purses filled to-day to regard the morrow with sublime contempt and disregard.

The A.B.F. gladdens the hearts by sending remittances every week to seventy-two old actors and actresses, who are absolutely dependent upon the Fund for their daily bread. In addition to these, however, many other cases of distress are attended to as the applications pour in to the offices at 8, Adam-street, Strand, W.C. The committee of the Fund never allow an actor or an actress to be buried in a pauper's grave, and, as a matter of fact, eight deceased members of the profession were given a decent interment by the Fund last month alone.

The following is a letter from an actress, aged seventy-four, who appeals for a renewal of the weekly allowance for herself and her mother (aged ninety-three). The names of the parties are kept strictly private, and we ourselves do not know who they are.

I am so very ill and nearly blind, with nothing to depend upon for my existence but the kind allowance that you have hitherto granted me. I therefore humbly ask for the renewal of the same so kindly given. I also have to ask for the renewal for my poor old mother, now in her ninety-third year. I need scarcely say she is infirm and helpless.

And another reads thus:—

With deepest gratitude and thanks, I beg to acknowledge your past kindnesses, and beg for a renewal of my life's support under God, whose great mercy to us passeth all understanding. May the light of His Grace direct you and prosper you in all your undertakings, helping you always, as you so benevolently help those dependent upon your bounty.

What more need be said?

TERRISS THEATRE.

On Monday, Oct. 31, the Drama in Four Acts, entitled
"EAST LYNNE."

This well worn but ever-popular drama is occupying the boards at this theatre during the present week, and is giving every satisfaction. Foremost among the performers is Miss Eugenie Magnus, who as Lady Isabel sustains that very trying character in excellent style. The part of Barbara Hare has an efficient interpretation from Miss Rosemary Rees; and Corney Carlyle is amusingly portrayed by Miss Marie M'Aulay. Mr Felix Pitt's excellent acting as Francis Levison gained a full measure of execration, and Mr Lionel D'Aragon's Archibald Carlyle was well received. Ample justice was done to the eccentricities of Mr Justice Hare and Dill by Mr Champion Abbott and Mr Fred De Vere. Henry St. Ledger was well placed as Lord Mountsevern, Willie Carlyle was in the able hands of Miss Bertha Baker, and as the Constable Mr Newman Maurice caused plenty of merriment. A sketch, entitled The Magic Bird, precedes the production.

THEATRICAL GOSSIP.

ANYTHING which reminds a theatrical audience of the possibility of a conflagration in a theatre is injudicious as tending to encourage panic; and we think that, instead of the words "fireproof curtain"—upon the curtain which has to be once lowered, nightly, by order of the Lord Chamberlain—which are calculated to promote nervousness, a plan of the house, showing all the exits, should be painted on the curtain in question, so that while it is down each of the audience could realise the geography of the house and study the shortest way of escape in case of need.

MR LIONEL BROUGH'S health is still, we regret to hear, imperfect. He was unable to take part at the Royalty Theatre on Thursday in the matinée for the benefit of the Nursing Sisters of the Sick Poor, and his many admirers in the house were much disappointed at the absence of their favourite, who is evidently not strong enough to play twice a-day.

MR MAURICE FARKOA, who has just returned from the Antipodes, once had the honour of singing before the Khedive and his household at Cairo. Of course, he did not see the ladies, but frequent laughter from behind the curtain where they sat showed that his dainty French songs were thoroughly appreciated. Mr Farkoa is of French and English parentage, and was born in Smyrna, Turkey. Over forty thousand gramaphone records have been sold of his well known laughing song. He makes a welcome reappearance at the Morton Testimonial matinée, at the Palace Theatre, on Tuesday.

MR BEERBOHM TREE and his company from His Majesty's Theatre have been commanded by the King to appear at Windsor Castle either on the 17th or the 19th inst., in A Man's Shadow, during the visit of the King and Queen of Portugal. Mr Tree will appear as Laroque and Luversan, Mrs Tree as Julie, and Mr James Fernandez as De Noirville, and Mr Lionel Brough and Mr E. M. Robson will resume their old parts in the play. The theatrical profession may congratulate itself warmly upon living in the reign of such a beneficent monarch as Edward VII., who is always a liberal patron and constant friend of actors and managers.

THE annual dinner of the Actors' Benevolent Fund, which is to be held on Dec. 7 at the Whitehall Rooms of the Hotel Metropole, will be presided over by the famous counsel, Sir Edward Clarke, K.C. Sir Edward has sent an appeal to a great number of prominent ladies and gentlemen, and the result, it is anticipated, will be of a highly satisfactory nature. The following is a copy of Sir Edward's letter asking for support for the Actors' Benevolent Fund:—"On Wednesday, Dec. 7th, at the Hotel Metropole, I am to have the honour of presiding at the annual dinner of the Actors' Benevolent Fund, and I am making an urgent appeal to all lovers of the dramatic art to maintain and extend the usefulness of this valuable charity. May I ask you to support me by being present at the dinner, and by allowing your name to appear on the list of stewards? If you are not able to attend, I shall be grateful for a donation to the Fund; you may be sure that it will be expended carefully and sympathetically in the relief of real distress. I am, faithfully yours, EDWARD CLARKE."

MR T. B. THALBERG, who has just returned from a long, successful tour in South Africa, wishes it to be known that he has decided to adopt, professionally, for the future his own name, Thalberg Corbett. We hope this deservedly popular actor, who has not been seen in London since he played Ned Falkner, in The Liars, with Sir Charles Wyndham, will not be long absent from our stage.

MISS NELLIE STEWART has written as follows to the Melbourne press:—"Permit me to contradict an error made in recent paragraphs, viz.: That I am part manageress and partner in Mr George Musgrove's dramatic company, as it is entirely false and misleading to the public. I am a member only of that company on a salary."

MR ARTHUR BOURCHIER has forwarded a cheque for £150, being the proceeds of the first performance of Mr Alfred Sutro's new play, The Walls of Jericho, which took place at the Garrick Theatre on Monday, and has received a most grateful letter of thanks from Mr William Jarman, the Mayor of Hull, for the same, saying that he will at once place it to the credit of the fund for the sufferers and relatives of the victims of the North Sea Disaster.

"DO WE BELIEVE?" is a subject at present agitating the minds of men. That there is a great deal of deep religious feeling among playgoers was proved by the rapt attention paid to the prayer in The Coal King by the audiences visiting the Elephant and Castle Theatre last week. On Saturday night the pit and gallery joined fervently with the entombed miners in the singing of the beautiful old hymn "Jesu, lover of my soul," and more than one "Thank God!" was heard when the rescue party broke through.

THE satire of The Walls of Jericho, at the Garrick Theatre on Monday, proved anything but acceptable to many of the occupants of the stalls. Between the acts sneering remarks were made about "attacks on society" and "riding the high horse," and, amidst the loud and enthusiastic applause which followed the final descent of the curtain, the faces of the malcontents were an interesting study. The author's work was evidently too true to nature, and the members of the smart society set who were present found that the cap fitted them.

THE "Kalgoorlie incident" referred to in these columns last week bulks largely in Western Australia. From a number of pulpits on the first Sunday of October the Chief Secretary was denounced for permitting Mr Beerbohm Tree's company to play The Sign of the Cross and The Eternal City on Sunday. One clergyman apparently considers this touring combination a cut above the common, for he declared that no company, "however respectable," should have been allowed to do such a thing. Another, with more frankness than logic, said he had seen The Sign of the Cross, and, while the piece was calculated to produce a good moral effect, and had of benefit to men and women, it should never have been presented on a Sunday. A third bellicose parson declared that he would "fight against Sunday newspapers, Sunday theatrical entertainments, Sunday river excursions, and Sunday flower shows." The Mayor of Freemantle, Western Australia, gave a civic entertainment in the Town Hall to celebrate the opening of the new King's Theatre. Responding to the toast of his health and the health of Mr Beerbohm Tree's touring company, who gave the first performances in the building, Mr Julius Knight said the erection of a theatre was one of the surest signs of the prosperity of a town. He cordially congratulated Freemantle on the acquisition of such a well-appointed, up-to-date temple of the drama.

MR G. M. MONTANINI, the acting-manager of The Traitor Prince company, and who also plays the part of the Hon. Bobby Vavasour Dalrymple in that drama, met on Monday evening with what might have proved a serious accident. The company was playing at the Theatre Royal, Leicester, and Mr Montanini was loading a revolver with blank cartridges, when it accidentally exploded, wounding his hand. The theatre medical adviser, Dr. Southam, was at once summoned, and the injured hand having been attended to, Mr Montanini pluckily went on with his part.

"SO Jefferson is going to retire. I can't understand it. He has no business to. He is only seventy-five. But maybe he will change his mind and act again next year. It is not so easy to give it up as it seems." Thus spoke Mrs G. H. Gilbert, the commencement of whose farewell tour in America at the age of eighty-three is recorded in another column. Mrs Gilbert has spent more than sixty years of her life on the stage, but for all that she confessed to an interviewer a fear that she might suffer an attack of stage fright when she made her first appearance in the new play that had been written especially for her. "However, I hope I don't cry," she said, "I am afraid I am still an over-sentimental person. I let my feelings get away with me and choke up and sob until I can't speak. It is very annoying, and it isn't fair to the audience. Whenever I did that in Mr Daly's company he used to say, 'Go and drink a glass of cold water and drown your emotion.' It was a good way, too—only one of the many good things that Daly knew. He was a delightfully great man in the theatrical business. I was with him for thirty-six years."

MRS GILBERT said that she had been very fortunate in her managers and associates. She played with John Owens for a long time, and he taught her more about comedy than any one she had ever been associated with. Owens, Daly, and Frohman were the names that would stick in her memory. Mr Charles Frohman, in particular, had been very kind to her. She had kept no record of the hundreds of parts she had played. If she had a favourite rôle it was a little bit that had been given to her in No Thoroughfare. But the late "Billy" Florence cut it out. "That's odd, isn't it?" said the veteran actress, "The part I liked best was the smallest I ever played, and so unimportant that it was cut out. But the small parts sometimes make the big hits."

MRS GILBERT thought she was in a pretty fit condition for her farewell tour. While she had no desire to pose in any "sweet sixteen" rôle, she strongly objected to being put down as a doddering old woman. Any intimation that she was feeble would be met with a prompt rebuke. In conclusion she said, "My voice is not very strong or heavy, but they tell me it still has good carrying powers. It is not the heavy voice that you can hear best, by any means. The only difference I notice is in studying my part. I can memorise as well as ever, but I don't hold it as well as I used to. That is, if I learn a scene perfectly to-day I may have forgotten it to-morrow. Still, I think I will be letter perfect on Monday night. I do hope, though, I shall not be frightened. I just know I shall cry. I can't help it. So silly of me, too."

MR NAT GOODWIN, the American actor-manager, has an original way of "waking up" the absent-minded members of his company. During a performance of The Usurper at Chicago, one of the actors had a lapse of memory in the middle of a sentence, which he endeavoured to cover up by a series of incoherent mumblings. The next speech, as supplied to Goodwin by the author, was, "Won't you stay and have breakfast?" which the clever comedian promptly supplemented with—and look over your lines!"

A PERFORMANCE of four scenes from The Tempest was given on Monday afternoon at His Majesty's Theatre by some of the little girls appearing as fairies in Mr Beerbohm Tree's production. The proceedings were private, only the parents and friends of the children being present. The stage-manager was the call-boy at the theatre. In an interval one of the small actors appeared and said, "We have just received this telegram from Lord Charles Beresford:—'Fired on the Russian fleet, mistaking them for trawlers.'" In another interval Mr Tree's younger daughters went on the stage, and handed the juveniles two boxes of sweets as a present from their mother. Mr Tree had given the children complete control of the stage, and as he was about to speak to the call-boy he was ordered off it by a little girl, who told him he had no business there.

AT the committee meeting of the Scenic Artists' Association, held at their offices, 5, Robert-street, Adelphi, on Monday last, Oct. 31 (Mr Walter Hann in the chair), Mr John Hare was elected an honorary member of the Association under Rule 11, which gives the committee power to elect as honorary members gentlemen distinguished in art, literature, science, or travel, or who have rendered signal service to the Association by forwarding its aims and objects. The following scenic artists were duly elected members, viz:—Messrs. W. B Bostock, of Hulme; J. A. Cameron, of Leigh; James Carl, of Brixton; Richard Durant, of Putney; Harry Mapleson, of Ealing; W. A. Martin, of West Croydon; A. W. Moore, of Wakefield; J. G. Rutland, of Denmark-hill; and W. R. Young, of Birmingham. Messrs A. E. Craven, Joseph Harker, W. Harford, and W. T. Hemsley were elected to serve with Messrs Walter Hann, E. G. Banks, and W. B. Spong on the exhibition sub-committee.

MISS OLGA NETHERSOLE will on Thursday next commence her season at the Shaftesbury Theatre with Mrs Craigie's new play, The Flute of Pan. The tale is mainly a love story, and in order to attain realism in the dialogue it was read over to the people who "sat for their portraits" as the amorous pair, with the result that it was highly approved of by them. The scenes of the piece are laid in Venice, Florence, and Siguria. The heroine is a princess and the hero an English nobleman.

MISS LENA ASHWELL and her accomplished company had a crowded audience at the Palace Theatre, Belfast, on Wednesday afternoon, when they appeared at a "flying matinée" in Mrs Dane's Defence. With characteristic energy Miss Ashwell travelled from Dublin—over one hundred miles distant—in the morning, and it was indeed gratifying that this gifted actress received such a tremendous reception from the innumerable playgoers in the Northern Capital. Miss Ashwell's clever and finished impersonation of Mrs Dane fairly captivated the house, who accorded her an ovation at the close of each act. Miss Ashwell's emotional acting in the trying cross-examination scene was most praiseworthy, and her triumph in Belfast was in every sense complete. Mr Frank Mills was also most successful as Sir Daniel Carteret, his natural and excellent performance being quite a feature. Praise is also due Mr Charles Groves for his admirable embodiment of Canon Bonsey, and as the mischief making Mrs Bulsom-Porter, Miss Marie Hudspeth sustained a difficult part with credit to herself. Mr L. Race-Dunrobin furnished a very skilful interpretation of Lionel Carteret, and other roles were satisfactorily filled by Miss Helen Macbeth (who was splendid as Lady Eastney), Miss Sidney Farebrother, and Messrs H. Hawley, Chas. A. Doran, and Cyril Peace.

AT the New King's Theatre, Pitfield-street, Hoxton, a free dinner to 100 local children was given on Thursday by Mr Leonard Mortimer, the lessee. Roast beef, vegetables, and plum pudding were served in the theatre, knives, forks, and plates being provided by Sir Thomas Lipton's gift, the Alexandra Trust. The house was hung with flags, and an orchestra played tunes.

WE are glad to announce that Miss Louise Moodie has quite recovered from her late severe indisposition. She hopes soon to be at work again. Miss Moodie made her first appearance at the Royal Alfred Theatre, London, in the part of Camille, in 1870, in an English version of the drama of the same name by Dumas the younger.

MR HERBERT WARING appeared at the London Bankruptcy Court on Tuesday, before Mr Registrar Linklater, on his public examination. Mr Le Breton, K.C., appeared on behalf of Mrs Lilie De Bathe (Mrs Langtry), the petitioning creditor, and Mr Hemmerde for the debtor, who applied to pass on accounts showing gross liabilities £3 731, of which £2 725 is unsecured, and assets £28. In examination by Mr Grey, Official Receiver, the debtor stated that his name was Herbert Waring Rutter, and that he was professionally known as "Herbert Waring." He was at present under engagement to Miss Olga Nethersole at a salary of £40 a-week. In June, 1901, he, with others, formed "Play, Limited," with a capital of £5,000, for the purpose of producing the play A Man of His Word. About £4 100 of the capital was subscribed. The play was to be produced at the Imperial Theatre, of which he had obtained a lease from Mrs Lilie De Bathe at £100 a-week, on behalf of the company. The play was not a success, and resulted in a loss of £1 980. It cost £2 000 to produce, and only ran for five weeks. The loss was about £500 a-week. He was served with a writ for the rent, notwithstanding that he had assigned the lease to the company in July, 1901.

MR WARING defended the action on the ground that the company was liable, and succeeded before Mr Justice Phillimore, but it was decided against him on appeal, and formed, with the costs, the debt of the petitioning creditor. Mr Grey—Your income averages £1,000 a year, and your expenditure £1,500 a year?—So it appears.—So that that also accounts for your failure?—To some extent.—Have you any engagement at present?—Yes, with Miss Olga Nethersole. The engagement is for the run of the piece with a minimum of a month. The salary is £40 a week. By Mr Le Breton—Since the writ was issued he had had an engagement in America at £100 a week with Mrs Patrick Campbell for eighteen weeks, six weeks at the Lyric in Othello at £50 a week, twelve weeks at the St James's in The Cardinal, and sixteen weeks at the Haymarket in Joseph Entangled at £40 a week. The examination was concluded.

THE public will learn with regret of the serious illness of Mr George Aspinall, the well-known composer and vocalist, who is suffering from an acute attack of paralysis, and will be unable for a long time to follow his profession. His friends are organising a concert for his benefit, for which many of our leading artistes have volunteered their services. It will take place at Bechstein Hall on Thursday evening, Dec. 1, and tickets may be had from J. B. Cramer and Co., of Oxford-street.

MR HENRY TWEEDIE, who represents Miss Olga Nethersole in the provinces, recently had a unique experience. An utter stranger, staying in the same hotel, approached Mr Henry Tweedie, and asked if he was particularly engaged the next morning; because, if not, he would be so grateful if Mr Henry Tweedie would act as best man at his wedding the following day. The plea was too polite to be resisted.

MISS KATE FLINN'S system of voice production has long proved its great merit, and continues to be very successful. Amongst recent pupils of Miss Flinn's are Miss Etty Morrison, who has been engaged by Mr George Edwardes and Miss Gaynor Rowlands, who is appearing in The Orchid—both very promising young artists who do credit to the training of their expert instructress.

MR GEORGE DAVEY, as a great attraction for his early-door patrons at the Grand Theatre, Islington, has secured Mr Fred W. Millis, the popular and clever Australian ventriloquist, who introduces to the audience an entertainment of great originality entitled "The Dear Homeland." The episode, which is written round a simple theme, deals with the anticipations of a wounded Australian who has been fighting in Africa as to his speedy departure for home, together with the nurse who has tended him, and the very realistic dream he has on lying down to rest. This scene, which represents his far-away home, shows the members of his family sitting outside the house, and Mr Millis, who quickly changes places from the couch to the centre of this group, gives a display of ventriloquial versatility which is remarkable. This will be obvious when we mention that the seven lay figures represented are an elderly colonial and his wife, an aboriginal, a Scotchman, a Chinaman, and a small boy, together with a baby blessed with particularly healthy lungs. Mr Millis, however, who was assisted by a lady who impersonated the nurse, gave a singularly fine exhibition of his powers, and at the conclusion of the act was compelled to acknowledge an enthusiastic call. The attraction should prove an immense success during his ensuing visit "down under."

MISS VERA BERINGER, who is to be leading lady in The Coming Race at St. George's Hall, commenced her career in the biggest part ever written for a child—Little Lord Fauntleroy. She has not had nearly as much theatrical experience as her sister Esmé, who made her début at about the same time. After appearing in her mother's problem play, Tares, doubling the parts of the Prince and the Pauper in an adaptation of Mark Twain's story, and acting with Miss Minnie Terry in Boots at the Holly Tree Inn, Miss Vera Beringer was not seen on the stage for several years. Then after her reappearance she played Juliet to her sister's Romeo, and since that time has occasionally appeared in London, her engagements including a season with Mr Van Biene and another with Mrs Patrick Campbell.

MR LEON M. LION will produce at the Opera House, Cheltenham, on Nov. 10, an English adaptation by Herbert Dansey of Sardou's play Ferreol de Meyrac, a matinée of which was given at the Royalty Theatre last February. The play has been renamed The Chain of Evidence. The cast will include Mr Henry Renouf, Mr Frederick Annerley, Mr Leon M. Lion, Mr Alan Borthwick, Miss Ada Marius, and Miss Maud M. Magrath.

MR JOHNNY DANVERS, who is to take the place of Mr Herbert Campbell in the Drury-lane pantomime this year, was one of poor Dan Leno's oldest friends, having been the fourth member of the little company consisting of Mr and Mrs Leno, sen., and their son. He tells many good stories of the old days so well described in "Dan Leno, Hys Booke." The two boys shared a room, and established a rule that the one who could tell the funniest story, or make up the best song, on the spur of the minute, should rise from his bed—even in the depths of winter—and bow many times to an imaginary audience outside the window.

MR DANVERS, having formerly belonged to the Mohawk Minstrels, afterwards became the best corner man with Moore and Burgess at St. James's Hall. His first appearance of all was with a company of children in the days of his earliest youth. His sole duty was to fire a gun, but the stage manager entertained grave doubts as to his physical strength. But little Johnny Danvers was so confident it would be "all right on the night," that he was allowed to try. He succeeded in letting the gun off, but the shock was so great that the small gunner fell flat on his back, much more seriously injured and frightened than the approaching enemy.

MR GEORGE DAVEY claims that the Grand Theatre is the first place of entertainment in England to exhibit a pantomime bill concerning the Christmas production. The poster, which is placed outside the main entrance, is a sixteen-sheet double crown size, and is of a very striking design.

A SPECIAL matinée to assist the Nursing Sisters of the Sick Poor (Little Sisters of the Assumption), was given on Thursday afternoon at the Royalty Theatre by permission of Miss Kate Santley. Mrs Madeleine Lucette Ryley appeared in a comedietta of her own writing entitled The Best of the Argument; and Mr Charles Warner appeared in the dramatic sketch Heard at the Telephone. Items were contributed by Mrs Brown-Potter, Miss Mabel Love, Miss Fannie Ward, Miss Eva Moore, Miss Janet Alexander, Mr Lennox Pawle, and Mr George Alexander, while vocal contributions, grave and gay, were given by Miss Kate Santley, Miss Eva Estelle Isaacs, Miss Ruth Vincent, Miss Kate Cutler, Miss Sybil Arundale, Miss Kitty Gordon, Miss Marie Studholme, Miss Dorothy George Edwardes, Mr Lionel Mackinder, Mr C. Browne, Mr George Graves, Mr Lawrence Rea, Mr Aubrey Fitzgerald, and Mr Edmund Payne; and Miss Belle Napier, Miss Bertha Moore, and Herr Liebling gave their services as solo pianists.

CAPTAIN ROBERT MARSHALL will withdraw The Duke of Killiecrankie from the Criterion Theatre next Saturday week, and on the following Tuesday the house will be reopened with Mr Gordon-Lennox's play The Freedom of Suzanne, performed by Miss Marie Tempest and company.

THE King has commanded Mr Lewis Waller, Miss Evelyn Millard, and the Imperial Theatre company to appear at Windsor Castle during the visit of the King and Queen of Portugal. The play to be presented will be Monsieur Beaucaire. The cast will include Mr Lewis Waller, Mr Edward Ferris, Mr Frank Dyall, Mr Charles Goodhart, Mr W. Gayer Mackay, Mr Sydney Brough, Mr A. E. George, Mr Charles Allan, Mr L. B. Brereton, Mr Arthur Lewis, Miss Evelyn Millard, Miss Constance Walton, Miss Mary Lewis, Miss Florence Sinclair, Miss May Chenery, and Miss Catherine Vyse. The scenery will be painted by Messrs Walter Hann, Gordon, and Harford, and E. G. Banks. Mr Wallé Keene will be stage-manager, and the performance will be under the superintendence of Mr Lyston Lyle.

MDLLE. ALICE NIELSEN, who made such a pronounced success in La Bohème, at Covent-garden on Friday night, was born in Southern America, passed her childhood in Kansas City, Missouri, made her dramatic début in the Eastern States, and studied for grand opera in Italy. Well as she sang before, Mdlle. Nielsen has to thank Mr Henry Russell, director of the San Carlo company, for the development of her voice and the cordial encouragement that has enabled her, after a comparatively short training, to appear in London in star parts. It is hardly two years ago that she came out at the Theatre Bellini, Naples, as Marguerite, in Faust, followed by a performance of La Traviata, which she sang twelve times in the San Carlo Theatre. She is very well known in the beautiful Italian city, and goes by the name of La Belle Americaine.

MDLLE. NIELSEN'S first attempt at an operatic solo was made in the far-off days in Kansas City. The place was a real stage, the hour was between a matinée and evening performance; there was no orchestra, and there was an unseen audience of one man—the manager of the theatre, who had refused to show little Alice Nielsen what it was like behind the scenes because she was so small he was afraid that she might be frightened, or even knocked down when the scenery was being changed. She contrived to slip in, however; hid herself during the performance, and, when it was over and the place was deserted, boldly marched into the middle of the stage, dimly lighted by a few gas-jets. Her little shoes dangled from her hand, for she loved to take them off and walk barefoot; her dark hair was in a tangle on her shoulders, and she had no idea that the manager was in the house. Being ambitious, even in those days, she sang "I dreamt that I dwelt in marble halls" in a high, childish voice to an imaginary audience. The manager, delighted as he was, thought it as well to give her a lesson not to enter a theatre uninvited, so he turned off the flickering gas-jets. The diminutive débutante was left in absolute darkness, and experienced her first and only fit of stage fright.

MR ALFRED SUTRO'S translation of Maeterlinck's Aglavaine and Selysette is to be presented at the Court for a series of six matinées, commencing on the afternoon of Tuesday, the 15th inst., with a cast including Miss Edyth Olive, Miss Thyrza Norman, Miss Marion Plarr, Miss Florence Farr, and Mr Walter Hampden.

THE committee of the Scenic Artists' Association have now under their consideration a proposal for the holding next February the first of their annual exhibitions of the works of scene painters—past and present—and scenic artists, theatrical managers, and others who are willing to lend models, sketches of scenes, portraits of scene painters, and articles of historical interest in connection with scene painting are invited to communicate with the secretary of the Association, Mr H. Lawrence Harris, at 5 Robert-street, Adelphi-terrace, W.C. The Engagement Bureau is now working very successfully, and London and provincial theatrical managers are being put daily into communication with scenic artists who are free to take contracts or accept engagements.

PRINCESS TE RANGI PAI, who gave a successful concert at Steinway Hall on Wednesday evening, is a daughter of Colonel Porter, C.B, whose distinguished services in the South African War will not readily be forgotten. Of Maori descent on her mother's side, she passed her childhood in New Zealand. The Princess possesses many interesting specimens of Maori carving in green stone, including a very curious ornament that she nearly always wears on a long gold chain round her neck. It is about three inches in length, and apparently represents, in a crude manner, the soul or spirit in a most elementary human shape.

MADAME DE CISNEROS, the young contralto, who made such a successful début at Covent-garden lately as Amneris, in Aida, was born in New York, of British parents, her father being Scotch and her mother Irish. She studied singing under the late Murio Celli, a once famous dramatic soprano of the old Italian school, also with Madame De Johnson, of the Marchesi school. After three years' training, she made her début at the Metropolitan Opera House, in New York, she being the first American to sing there without a European reputation. The chances of appearing in grand Italian opera in America, as in England, are very limited, and, acting on the advice of Mr Edouard De Reszke and Mr Maurice Grau, the young singer went to Italy, where every town has its opera season and every small boy is familiar with the grand operas, music being the recreation of the people. One month from her arrival, strictly on her merits she was engaged for a season at Turin, making her début there as Amneris, in Aida and scored a genuine success. She subsequently appeared in Milan (two seasons), Trieste, Ferrara, Parma, and many other towns of Italy. Last season Madame De Cisneros was engaged at the San Carlos Theatre, Lisbon, where she greatly added to her reputation. Semiramide was specially revived to enable her to appear as Arsace. The opera previous to this had not been given in Lisbon for fifteen years, when Scalchi sang the part. She is re-engaged for the next season at the San Carlos, commencing in December and lasting to March next. Having experience in oratorio Madame De Cisneros should be a valuable recruit to the ranks of our oratorio singers. In America she sang under her maiden name of Eleanor Broadfoot. She has since married Count De Cisneros, a member of a fine old Spanish family in Cuba.

MISS KITTY DAVIS, daughter of Mr Owen Hall, will make her début at the Camden Theatre on Monday, Nov. 14 with Mrs Langtry, in the piece entitled Mrs Dering's Divorce. If Miss Davis has inherited the talent and brightness of her clever father, then, indeed, she will be a great ornament to the English stage.

MESSRS LEONARD PAGDIN AND LEWIS GILBERT have secured the rights of A Woman of Impulse, and will tour the same in the spring with a strong cast. The play is booked at several first-class theatres, and the spring tour is almost filled up.

MISS EDITH OLIVE, who is playing Aglavaine, in Mr Alfred Sutro's translation of Maeterlinck's Aglavaine and Selysette, to be produced at the Court Theatre, made her first success in a very different style of part and play—Louisa Dexter, in Mr H. Arthur Kennedy's farcical comedy The New Wing. She has also figured, on tour, as the heroine of a Drury-lane melodrama. She played a long engagement several years ago under the management of Miss Julia Neilson and Mr Fred Terry. Miss Olive is the wife of Mr Arthur Applin, who acts, writes stories, and has challenged fate with at least one dramatic work, called The Passion Flower, written in collaboration with Mr Charles Thurston.

M. LE BARGY, the French actor, is on his holiday, during which he will play in England, Belgium, Portugal, and Spain. He will be accompanied by Georges Grand, the new jeune premier of the Comedie Française, Paris, who was so long associated with Porel at the Paris Vaudeville. This tour will necessitate M. Grand's renouncing his rôle in the production of King Lear at Antoine's Theatre. Loti and Vedel have made an exact translation of Shakespeare's play. Their version was at first offered to Claretie on Antoine's advice, he generously declaring that no one could adequately interpret the rôle of King Lear except Mounet-Sully. But Shakespeare's Anglo-Saxon proved a trifle too much for the classic house of Molière, and the MSS. found its way back to Antoine, who gave it a hearty welcome.

MADAME JEANNE WAYDA, who made a phenomenal success at Covent-garden, Wednesday, Nov. 2, as Nedda, in Pagliacci, is a Pole, and was born at Warsaw. In her early youth her father was a man of means and position; but as she was approaching womanhood he suffered great losses, which determined her to try and turn her gift of song to account. Madame Sembrich, her compatriot, having endowed the Conservatoire at Lemberg (her native town) with two scholarships, the young student was successful in gaining one, which entitled her to four years' study. On the completion of her term she made her début at Lemberg, in Sonnambula with such success that she was immediately engaged for Warsaw, where she remained for five years, playing for eight months each year. During this engagement the young singer appeared with many well-known artistes, including Caruso, Sammarco, Battistini, Marconi, &c., first as a soprano leggero and later, as her voice developed, in heavier rôles. At Warsaw Madame Wayda created the rôle of Uliana in Paderewski's opera of Manru. After the opera had been produced a grand concert of his works was given, and five singers were selected to sing songs composed by the great pianist. Madame Wayda sang "Dudziarz" with such expression that the composer declared "He only then fully realised the full depths of the music he had written." She next appeared in Berlin, and last season sang at the San Carlos, Lisbon. At the end of the present season at Covent-garden she will fulfil an engagement in Odessa. The singer's répertoire includes Lohengrin, Tannhäuser, Walkure, The Flying Dutchman, Tosca, Manon (Puccini), Bohème, Pagliacci, Otello, Ernani, Trovatore, Andrea Chenier, and Faust. Two years ago she married Monr. L. Wayda, a doctor of law, her maiden name being Jeanne Korolevitch, and their permanent home is in Lemberg.

MR GEORGE DAVEY has thought it desirable to alter the date of the matinée which he has arranged to give at the Grand Theatre, Islington, for the benefit of the fisher folk who suffered in consequence of the outrage committed on the Hull trawlers by the Baltic Fleet. The performance will now take place on Nov. 17 instead of, as formerly announced, on the 10th inst. The stage on this occasion will be under the direction of Mr Charles Browning, the well-known music hall agent, who has secured the artists for the matinée. The function is to receive the patronage and active support of Mr A. M. Torrance, J.P., Mayor of Islington, and late chairman of the L.C.C.; Sir Albert Rollit, M.P. for South Islington; Mr Thomas Lock, M.P. for West Islington; Sir George T. Bartley, M.P. for North Islington; and the local councillors, who will act nominally on the committee. The entire staff of the Grand Theatre will give their services free at this matinée.

MISS CASSIE BRUCE, who is to play a typical child of The Coming Race—a boy of ten years named Taë—in the forthcoming production at St. George's Hall, has been a member of Mr Maskelyne's company for about six years. She comes of a theatrical family, and her own experiences behind the footlights have been punctuated by many amusing and interesting events. Her very first speaking part was in the original production of My Lady Bountiful, when she had to make a bob and announce that the bride's carriage was at the door, or words to that effect. When the curtain fell at the end of the first act on the night of the dress rehearsal, the author was heard to ask from the stalls for the little country girl, and Miss Bruce had to walk into the centre of the stage, uncertain whether she was to be highly praised or summarily dismissed before the whole company. It turned out, however, that Mr Pinero only wished her to be "less graceful in the bob."

TOURING with a Shakespearian company Miss Bruce had the pleasure of seeing one of the funniest accidents that ever occurred during a performance of Hamlet. Ophelia herself, instead of a dummy, was carried on to the stage in the graveyard scene and lowered into the open grave. This required very careful management, and the Second Gravedigger, in his anxiety, leaned too far forward, lost his balance and fell. It was an awful second—especially for Ophelia—but the King and Laertes were equal to the occasion. They each seized a leg as the luckless gravedigger tipped forward, and, by dint of great exertion, upheld him in this ridiculous position, head downwards, until the curtain fell. The gravedigger was not allowed to take the "call" uproariously demanded by the audience.

MISS CASSIE BRUCE seems to have had a leaning towards England's Home of Mystery from her childhood, for she has a vague recollection of being taken to the entertainment at Egyptian Hall long before her acting days, and afterwards practising Mr Maskelyne's clever plate-spinning, with disastrous results to the best china at home. Her first part on joining the company was Susan, in Trapped by Magic, which she played 850 times. There are many illusions with regard to the stage. Miss Bruce's experiences may be said to be a practical proof of it. She has appeared at Egyptian Hall as a floating head, a living statue, a little Japanese concealed in a huge pie, a flying spirit, and a vanishing lady. In the illusion that has now been running for such a long time, called "Well, I'm ——" she disappears from the stage, and is discovered a few seconds later at the back of the gallery. Last week an old gentleman, who had watched the performance with an anxious expression, greeted her appearance with the words, "I'm very pleased to see you, miss, safe and sound!" He seemed to imagine that the life of a young lady was sacrificed by Mr Maskelyne every day to add effect to the illusion.

HENRY IRVING AT DUNDEE.

Sir Henry Irving was entertained on Tuesday evening in the Royal Hotel, Dundee, at a public banquet, which was attended by over 150 ladies and gentlemen. Mr W. L. BOASE, of Binrock, presided, and amongst the others present were Sir James Low and Lady Low, Principal J. Yule Mackay, the Rev. Kenneth Mackenzie, and Mr Eade Montefiore. The representatives of Sir Henry Irving's company present were:—Mr Bram Stoker, Mr and Mrs H. J. Loveday, Miss Edith Wynne Matthison, Mrs Cecil Raleigh, Miss Maud Fealy, Mr and Mrs H. B Stanford, Mr and Mrs James Hearn, Mr Gerald Lawrence, Mr Sydney Faulks, Mr F. Tyars, and Mr Percy Burton.

After the usual loyal and patriotic toasts the CHAIRMAN proposed "Our Guest," and in doing so he said they were fortunate indeed in having as a guest a distinguished man, and one of the greatest actors of their day. In their name he offered Sir Henry a hearty welcome, and assured him of the great pleasure he gave them by his presence. Sir Henry had done much for their instruction and for their entertainment by revealing to them so vividly the wonderful creations of the Drama. They only knew how great the genius of Tennyson or Shakespeare was when a great actor unfolded to them the beauties of their works; when, for the time, they felt that they were actually living amongst these historic characters, and were sharing in the joys and passions which swayed them. How great then was the art of him who could thus move them! How rare the talent; Yet for years Sir Henry had exercised this influence over the audiences of this land and in America who had had the pleasure of hearing him. "What is the secret of his success?" said the speaker. "Talent, no doubt, but above all (I think Sir Henry will agree with me) earnest study and unwearying and infinite pains. It is so in all professions, though genius surely counts for much.' How little they thought of the power of will, which, when all other difficulties were surmounted, enabled a great actor to put aside the disappointments, and vexations, and trials incidental to their daily lives, and it might be stifle even pain itself, in order to fulfil engagements and not disappoint the public—a public often too exacting. It was surely little wonder that the day arrived when he should think of rest and quiet, and find that even to him there was no perpetual youth. "This is the one note of sorrow," concluded Mr Boase, "in our meeting to-night, a dominant chord, I fear, so far as we are concerned, for we shall be sorry to say farewell, but when we do so it will be with every wish for Sir Henry's health and happiness, and for ourselves we shall have still happy memories of the past."

The toast was pledged with the greatest enthusiasm.

Sir HENRY IRVING, in rising to respond, was received with cheers. He said:—It is to me a great pleasure to act in Dundee once again before I take my leave of the stage, and I cannot tell you how happy it makes me to be in the honourable position of guest of this brilliant gathering to-night. Unhappily, just before I was to have visited you six years ago, I was unable through illness to keep my professional engagement, or to appear at the banquet so kindly arranged by friends in this great city as a welcome to Miss Ellen Terry and myself. This hearty greeting of yours, and the most kind words to which I have just listened, are deeply gratifying to an actor who is not far from the end of his career. And I feel your good-fellowship all the more because it shows me how well I have retrieved my earliest misfortune—the misfortune of not being a Scot. I did my best to repair the error of my parents and my pedigree by spending much of my apprenticeship in Scotland. It was a good school, gentlemen; full of discipline; no enervating luxury; no suppers after the play—well, none on this scale. You will recollect Sydney Smith's famous description of the early Edinburgh Reviewers cultivating literature on a little oatmeal. Well, I remember how I cultivated the drama here in Dundee on a very little marmalade.

SIR HENRY'S DUNDEE REMINISCENCES.

Man and boy, as the First Gravedigger would say, I remember it these six-and forty years. Yes, I believe it was in the summer season of 1858 that the company of which I was a humble recruit came over from the Theatre Royal, Edinburgh, with our repertory of plays, among which, of course, was Hamlet. That reminds me—you see that one effect of your hospitality is to set me talking at large about very old times—that when I was playing Hamlet in London thirty years ago, a famous old actor, Henry Compton, who really was a Scot, opened the evening bill with A Fish Out of Water. "Come and see me in A Fish Out of Water," he used to say to his friends, "and I think you had better stop and see a young fellow named Irving in the after-piece." Well, "'twas in the prime of summer-time" in '58 that we brought that after-piece from Edinburgh to Dundee. I should not say that summer was the best season for theatricals in your city. But what were we to do? There was a vacation in Edinburgh, and nobody had asked us to go yachting round Skye, or salmon fishing in the Spey—a little oversight that happened sometimes. So we decided to stick to business if we could get any. We formed ourselves in what they call a commonwealth. I don't know that would work itself out, but on our principle it was that if you had £1 a-week you would take a percentage if the £1 did not come in. If more than £1 did come in of course you got more. Everybody took a percentage, and it generally resulted in this sort of thing, that if you had £1 a-week you got 10s.

Our 'prentice han'

and the man was Shakespeare. How it all comes back to me! I see that remarkable production of Hamlet in Castle-street Theatre. It was no sumptuous. Those critics who tell you that when we produce Shakespeare nowadays we paint the lily and gild refined gold—they would have been pleased with the absolute simplicity of our scenery and accessories in that blessed summer time. When the King drank to Hamlet—I was the King—I was also the Ghost, and several other useful persons—well, I drank to Hamlet out of one of Keiller's empty jars. I do really believe that the finest old family plate of Elsinore—the richly chased goblet—would have passed unnoticed. But when the playgoers of Dundee—there were not many of them for our summer season; but, if few, they were appreciative—I say when they saw that simple marmalade jar, which had done its duty in one of their own happy, unpretending homes—they rose at it with tumultuous joy. And when the First Gravedigger handed the skull of Yorick to Hamlet—a skull which was visibly a small, attenuated, consumptive, and rather grimy turnip—then we knew that we had put our trust in the power of illusion, and not in vain! Well, gentlemen, a great deal has happened to me since then, and upon some of it Mr Boase has touched in his most flattering speech. I have had the good fortune—which is very strongly in my mind to-night—to make troops of friends on both sides of the Border. Many of them are here. If I have lost any it is by the hand of death alone, and they, alas! are not a few in all the years that have passed since first I saw Dundee. But I am proud to know that, in the ups and downs of a life full of toil, I have won and kept your regard by the faithful, if imperfect, practice of a rare and difficult art. At least there has been a purpose steadfastly pursued, whatever the shortcomings of achievement—a purpose which has always aimed at the highest standard of the theatre. It is not a standard fixed in a groove. If I may say so, there is some variety in the little bill I am submitting to you this week. The drama touches life at so many points that it can take a very wide compass indeed without forfeiting its mission of intelligent recreation. "The web of our life is of a mingled yarn, good and ill together; our virtues would be proud if our faults whipped them not; and our crimes would despair if they were not cherished by our virtues." To be amused in a theatre—well, we all want to be amused in a theatre; but not to be amused by what is merely vapid. We want to be amused, I take it, by the employment of true sympathy, humour, and imagination. It is to the imagination that the drama makes its highest appeal. And with the hope that, as an interpreter of the drama, I have done something for that, I shall carry your generous voices in my memory and in my heart as long as my days do grow.

Mr W. F. DICKIE, in proposing "The Other Members of Sir Henry Irving's Company," said that Sir Henry himself, with the chivalry of his nature which formed one of his many personal charms, had admitted that he could not have attained the success which he had done unless he had been aided and supported by the talented companies with whom he had been so long associated. He coupled the toast with the name of Mr Bram Stoker, who was well known in the dramatic world, and an old friend of Dundee. Mr Stoker was, however, an older friend of Sir Henry's, and had for many years been his right-hand man.

Mr BRAM STOKER, acting-manager, in reply, returned thanks for his comrades. For his comrades he would say this, that they were all comrades of their chief. The effects which they had seen were only got by loyal comradeship, because in that little microcosm—and the stage was a microcosm; it was a little world of its own—there was as much necessity for loyalty and unity and each giving way and supporting the dominant idea in the production of their plays as there was in the Government or in fighting the battles of the country.

Principal MACKAY gave "The Stage," and expressed regret at the departure of Mr Eade Montefiore from Dundee, and in his new sphere they wished him God-speed.

Mr EADE MONTEFIORE, in reply, expressed regret that his managing-director, Mr Robert Arthur, was not present to answer for his stewardship of the stage in Dundee. He was afraid that his experience of Dundee had taught him that art in connection with the stage was a heritage of the past, and not an actuality of the future. He felt that the theatre was faced with the great danger of losing its grip on dramatic art, for commerce and art had to walk hand-in-hand. It was, however, the visits of Sir Henry Irving and his coadjutors in their great artistic work that gave an impetus to Shakespeare and poetic drama. Unfortunately, many artistic plays of decided merit came and went, and were heard of no more. The public seemed nowadays to think that the theatre should be an entertainment house only, and that the duty of the manager was to provide a light and airy programme which was only a slight remove from the music hall, and the managers of the moment had to confess that the popular possession of the stage lay with musical comedy and its ilk. He prophesied that the Dundee stage to-morrow had, with such constituency, a future of exceeding promise. He looked forward in the years to come, with the passing of the older generation, to a positive support from the municipal authorities that was to-day sadly wanting. He thought the duty of the City Fathers was not only to judge on the subject of theatre licensing, but, as men of the world, to do their duty to their citizens by an actual presence, and so learning, understanding, helping, and safeguarding the public pleasures.

A LARGE number of gentlemen connected with the music publishing trade assembled at St. Pancras Station on Friday morning to bid farewell to Mr Stanley F. Mullen, of the John Church Music Publishing Company, and till recently the energetic secretary of the Musical Copyright Association. Principally by reason of his health, this respected gentleman is proceeding to Australia, maybe permanently, and bears with him the hearty good wishes of all who have come in contact with him, with the exception, perhaps, of the "music pirates." Mr Mullen, who is accompanied by his wife and daughter, was the recipient recently of a handsome testimonial, and most of the subscribers thereto were on the platform. Among the many present were the Misses Mullen and Mr Fred Mullen, Mr Read, of the John Church Company, Mr Fred Day (representing Messrs Francis, Day, and Hunter), together with Mr J. Thurlow (Mr David Day's secretary), Mr G. C. Holbeach, well known in the world of music; Miss Puttick, Mr John Abbott, assistant-secretary of the Musical Copyright Association; Mr C. Constanduros, Mr Herbert Hadley, Mr W. H. Watts, Mr Fred Blott, Mr John Smith (Messrs Francis, Day, and Hunter's manager), and several prominent song-writers and representatives of the Press. The party later embarked on the Orient liner Ophir for Melbourne.

SONNET TO LIONEL BROUGH.

The Rev. W. J. Gomersall, F.R.S., sends us the following sonnet to Lionel Brough, suggested by the celebration of his jubilee on the stage:—

What though to-night we retrospective gaze
O'er fifty years, our Yorick still thou art;
Still, as of old, in these thy full-orbed days,
Nature thy mirror is, and jest thy part
Lover of Nature, nor of Man the less—
Whether o'er wolds and lands wandering, or where
The millioned City throbs—we thee confess,
Who e heart ne'er learnt on cynic's food to fare.
Faithful and kind, in sorrow, joy, or loss,
Whether as husband, father, brother, friend,
We've learned to know thee, and, whate er thy cross,
Patient and unrepining to the end.
Oh! then, to-night let lips acclaim once more,
The while with joy and jest the feast flows brimming o'er!

MISS FLORENCE ST. JOHN, who had the misfortune to break two ribs and some of the small bones in one of her feet, is, we are delighted to hear, making steady progress to recovery. She is now able to walk about, and has left Bedford-square for Brighton for rest and recuperation.

"LAL" BROUGH AND THE O.P.'S.

The assembly of the members of the O.P. Club at the Criterion on Sunday was a "record" gathering, even in the annals of this prosperous club, whose long list of entertainments since its foundation is indeed something to be proud of. The object of this particular feast was to pay affectionate and admiring tribute to one of our most genuine, most gifted, and most sterling comedians. The arrangements of the Jubilee Dinner were entirely in the hands of Mr Carl Hentschel, who originated the idea of paying this well-deserved tribute to Mr Brough's many merits. Mr "Lal" Brough's career has been so often recounted, and he is so familiar a figure to all playgoers, that one has only to mention his name to create associations of ability, of honesty, of humour, and of kindliness. It was a most interesting, and, as Mr Stead would say, "challenging" thing, this meeting of so many young and ardent devotees of the drama with this hale, genial, and still sturdy and strenuous dramatic artist. When he rose to respond to the toast of his health he seemed to stand as a monument of a class and type which are steadily disappearing, and to be a link with a literary and dramatic age which will soon become traditional.

The Grand Hall at the Criterion was filled by a cheery company, who gave expression to the enthusiasm created by the occasion in loud and hearty cheers and plaudits. Mr Algernon L. Collins occupied the chair, and the company included Sir Squire Bancroft, Sir Francis Burnand, Mr F. P. O'Connor, M.P., Mr H. Beerbohm Tree, Sir W. Quayle Jones, Mr Cecil Raleigh, Lieut. Colonel Newnham-Davis, Mr Carl Hentschel (hon. treasurer), Judge Leicester Holme, Mr H. V. Esmond, Mr Fred Uptor, Mr Richard Green, Mr Algernon Lindo, Mr A. Van Biene, Mr Edward Ledger, Mr Sydney Brough, Mr John Le Hay, Mr Arthur Faber, Mr F. A. Bovett, Mr Louis Bradfield, Mr A. F. Robbins, Mr John Hare, Mr Harry Nicholls, and Mr Stanley Greig and Mr J. Davis Smith (joint hon. secretaries).

After the toast of "the King" had been honoured,

The CHAIRMAN proposed "Our Guest," and congratulated Mr Brough on his recovery from his recent illness. Sir Henry Irving had written regretting his inability to be present on "such an interesting and memorable occasion." He wrote, "Lionel Brough is one of the oldest of my friends, and it is a sincere regret to me not to be able to be present to aid in doing him honour—honour which he has well and honestly won in a long life of artistic work. His abilities have shone with their own light, and by his genuine art and skill as a player and by the great and natural gifts showered upon him he has won the public to him, as much as he has by his charm and generosity and solid worth endeared to him his many friends. Please add to whatever tributes the meeting may yield to him my faith and tender and warmest regards and remembrance."

Mr LIONEL BROUGH, who was received with loud cheers, said he did not like quite so much reminiscence and research as had been displayed by their Chairman. He started life as an office-boy at the offices of the Illustrated London News, and there he came into contact with many of the leading literary lights of the time, being patted on the head by such men as Mark Lemon, Dickens, and Thackeray. He referred to his connection with the Newsboys' Corps. Uniforms, he said, were found for about two hundred and forty, but in a month's time the corps was reduced to eighty, the remainder having left and taken their uniforms with them. He also spoke of the time he spent in the office of the Morning Star, where he had the immense advantage of knowing John Bright. He was sorry to say that he was the only one alive of the nine men who started the Savage Club. He related a variety of interesting reminiscences of his career, and told a number of anecdotes of famous men with whom he had come in contact. He mentioned a certain journalist connected with the Illustrated London News office who was somewhat uncleanly in his habits. The editor once remarked to Douglas Jerrold that he—the editor—could not understand why the man's hands were always dirty. "I can't say," replied Jerrold, "unless it is that he has a habit of rubbing them over his face." Mr Brough also described how he had been "kicked on to the stage." A friendly actor on his—Mr Brough's—first appearance—it was in the character of a bailiff—came to the wings to back him up, and did so literally by giving him, on his entrance, a tremendous kick behind. Incidentally Mr Brough remarked that after he had got used to the sea of white faces on the other side of the footlights, he lost all his nervousness until he had been for some time before the public. He observed that he did not think the actor who was not nervous "worth a Continental." The artist of experience was nervous because he realised what he had to gain by success, and what he had to lose by failure. Mr Brough traced his career through a variety of adventures and experiences. He was, he said, the first man who ever presented Pepper's Ghost before Royalty. The Emperor Frederick of Prussia saw the show, and implored Mr Brough to disclose to him the modus operandi. Mr Brough consented, on the condition that the Emperor would promise not to go into business against him. He then took the Royal explorer behind the scenes, and appeared to the spectators to stab him to the heart. The Empress, who was in a box in front, shrieked aloud; but the Emperor reassured her by exclaiming, "It is noding! I am not hurt!" Speaking of the recent years of his connection with Mr Beerbohm Tree, Mr Brough said that they had been the best of his life. The company at His Majesty's, he said, were often inclined to think, when a new piece was in preparation, that Mr Tree was too particular about apparently trivial matters; it was only when they saw the "tesselated pavement" in its place that they appreciated the value of Mr Tree's insistence on detail. The conclusion of Mr Brough's speech was delivered with deep and earnest feeling and was listened to with respectful and sympathetic attention. Many boys and girls, and many men and women, he said, now had ideas about going on the stage, and the profession was crowded, but he did not think it was crowded with the right sort of people. His ideas of the stage, of its surroundings, its honesty, and its morality were such that he had brought up his four children to go upon it. During the fifty years he had been upon the stage he had made more true and honest friendships than he could have done in any other profession in the world, and he could not call to mind that he had made a single enemy. With regard to his present manager, Mr Tree, the best part of his time had been spent under him. He thanked them for their kind reception that night, and said, in conclusion, that, during his fifty years, he had never brought any disgrace upon or smirched the profession he loved so well.

A vote of thanks to the chairman was proposed by Mr T. P. O'CONNOR in a humorous speech, in which he told of a pawnbroker in a certain town in Ireland, who having "pledges of regard" from almost all the literary men in the place, was allowed at public meetings to be as prosy and elaborate in his orations as he pleased. He said that he was glad Mr Brough, who was a Home Ruler like himself, had not gone into Parliament, as he would have been a very dangerous rival from his popularity and eloquence.

Mr BEERBOHM TREE in seconding the proposal, said he was not quite as accustomed as Mr O'Connor was to be unexpectedly called upon to orate; and he almost feared to follow him—to "tread on the tail of his coat." After paying an eloquent testimony to Mr Lionel Brough's merits, Mr Tree concluded by saying, "I am glad to think that both he and his son are to be associated with me in my next production."

Mr ALGERNON COLLINS responded to the vote in fitting terms. With the latter toasts was interspersed an agreeable and varied entertainment, under the direction of the hon. secretaries, Messrs J. Davis Smith and Stanley Greig, provided by such excellent artists as Messrs Jas. A. Bovett, W. Louis Bradfield, Tom G. Clare, E. Gordon Cleather, Fred T. Daniels, Arthur Faber, Richard Green, John Le Hay, Richard Temple, and the Miles-Stavordale Quintette. Mr Algernon Lindo and Mr Sinclair Mantell were excellent accompanists.

LIONEL BROUGH.

AN APPRECIATION.

BY A BROTHER ACTOR.

Think of it, ye budding, aspiring, perspiring, but seldom retiring amateurs—fifty years untiring stage work, and still able to show you how to act, how to be modest, and how to make friends! Lionel Brough—"Uncle Lal," as he is affectionately termed by the thousands who know and love him—never posed as a "society actor," and yet he is always welcome in any society, from the Old Kent-road to Park-lane—aye, and the many residences of our gracious King, God bless him! Think of it, I say. Fifty years a gifted, hard-working actor; still working, still gaining more laurels, still genial and perfectly unaffected, and still the same amiable, amusing, "story-telling" Bohemian of the good old "fifties." I won't say how many years ago it is since I first secured "Lal's" friendship, but I was in petticoats, and he was in the Hoy Hotel, Margate. I can just remember he gave me a large piece of cake and a few anecdotes. Since that we have been firm friends, and whenever and wherever we meet I get the welcome Brough alone knows how to give an old acquaintance. "Lal" is still a confirmed raconteur, He has always something fresh to tell you, and he tells it with the gusto—and far more originality—of any man thirty years his junior. When success attended him—and he must have had hundreds of successes—he never had a swollen head or "put on side." In reverses he was ever plucky and philosophical, he never grumbled or bemoaned his fate. In domestic tribulation—and he was but recently robbed of wife, a son, and a daughter—he bore with unflinching bravery and unparalleled fortitude three successive blows, and suffered his pain without a murmur. So let us drain a bumper to "Uncle Lal," king of Bohemian story tellers, prime minister of pure humour, and best of friends. May he enjoy a diamond jubilee in health and prosperity; may he double his number of friends, and still remain "the comedian without an enemy."

To give an exhaustive account of Lionel Brough's unique historic career would severely tax the space of a journal even more bulky than The Era, so I can at the present moment give but a cursory and attenuated record of his life's work, but of this be assured, it has always been strenuous, artistic, and unfailingly honourable!

Brough was born in Pontypool, March 10, 1836. Son of Barnabus Brough, at one time a dramatist of no mean repute and writing under the pen name of "Barnard De Burgh," "Lal" had two celebrated brothers, William and Robert (popularly known as "the Brothers Brough"), authors. Lionel Brough began "pushing for a living" in the office of John Timbs, when that good gentleman was editor of the Illustrated London News, and when among its shining literary lights were Albert Smith, Douglas Jerrold, Charles Dickens, and the great William Makepiece Thackeray. In the early years of its existence he was assistant publisher of the Daily Telegraph. In that capacity Brough lays claim to having originated the system of selling newspapers in the streets, having organised in London for the Daily Telegraph a staff of 240 boys for that purpose. He made his début in December, 1854, at the Lyceum Theatre, under the management of the artificial Madame Vestris and the volatile and debonnair Charles Mathews, in an extravaganza by his brother, William Brough, entitled Prince Pretty Pet, and a farce, My Fellow Clerk. After this Vestris died, and Brough for a short period left the stage, returning to the Lyceum in 1858, under the management of Mr Edmund Falconer, and in that year played in The Siege of Troy under the nom de theatre of Lionel Porter, and in his manager's drama, entitled Francesca. He then gave the stage a rest for five years, and filled in the interval by joining the editorial staff of the Morning Star. Following this tentative engagement he presented to London entertainment seekers "a show," of which the pièce de résistance was Cinderella, written by Byron, Leicester Buckingham, the Brothers Brough, Frank Telfourd, Andrew Halliday, and others. Then followed a year's engagement at the Polytechnic Institution, and he toured after that with the celebrated "Ghost" exhibition.

Brough had the honour of appearing, in conjunction with the members of the Savage Club, before Queen Victoria, Prince Consort, and Royal Family, in aid of the "Lancashire Famine Relief Fund." Later, the Queen gave him a scarfpin, which, in his own words, he swears he "will wear to his dying day, even when he hasn't got a scarf." In February, 1864, he joined Alexander Henderson's company at the Prince of Wales's Theatre, Liverpool, and remained a much-admired ornament to that company for over three years. Following this came an engagement at the old Amphitheatre, then under the management of Copeland, Henderson, and Byron. Brough became an enormous favourite in Liverpool, and the result was a lucrative engagement in London, where he appeared under the management of Labouchere, who is to this day still the embodiment of "truth." At this Theatre (the Queen's) he made his first striking success in a burlesque on The Strangers, written by an author who could write—Robert Reece. At the same time he made a pronounced "hit" as a character actor in H. J. Byron's Dearer than Life. This stamped Brough as a legitimate comedian, and as Tony Lumpkin and Bob Acres, and in any Shakespearean comedy part, he is unrivalled. On the opening of the St. James's Theatre by Mrs John Wood he was selected to play Tony in the ambitious revival of Goldsmith's masterpiece, and has since played the part to the tune of nearly 790 times.

In 1885 Lionel Brough paid a visit to America, and in 1889 went on a professional tour in South Africa playing various standard pieces, such as Milky White, &c. On his return from this expedition he accepted an engagement under Mr Horace Sedger to play the leading comic part in La Cigale.

Mr Brough during his long career has appeared in every town of importance in the United Kingdom, and his ever-welcome name has figured in the following metropolitan playhouses:—The Old Queen's, the St. James's, the Holborn (known afterwards as the Duke's), Covent-garden, Gaiety, Criterion, Folly, Imperial, Drury-lane, Terry's, Comedy, Globe, Opera Comique, Lyric, Avenue, Royalty, Haymarket, and His Majesty's. In the banquet given to Brough at the Criterion the other night he proved that he had lost none of his powers. If there is a proud and happy man to-day "Lal" should be that man, and in his happiness he should be joined by his clever daughter Mary ("Polly") and his sunny son "Bob" (Sidney Brough).

MR OSWALD BRAND has revised the old drama The Peep o' Day, and will produce it at the Grand Theatre on Monday. The piece has not been performed for a long time, and next week's revival should, therefore, be an interesting one.

MISS ELEANOR ROBSON, who has made such a distinct hit as the servant in Mr Zangwill's play, Merely Mary Ann, at the Duke of York's Theatre, will return to America next month, sailing by the s.s. Deutschland on Dec. 16. It was originally intended that her visit to this country would terminate about the middle of this month, but in consequence of the great success with which her efforts at the Duke of York's Theatre have been met, Messrs Liebler and Co., the managers, "cancelled time" in the States in order that London playgoers might have a further opportunity to witness her clever representation of Mary Ann. On arriving in the American capital Miss Robson will appear in Merely Mary Ann at a special matinée to be given at the Amsterdam Theatre on the 23rd prox. Three days later she will open in the same play at St. Louis, and this engagement will be followed by a tour of the States.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

The Lady Mayoress presented the prizes to the successful students of the Guildhall School of Music at the Guildhall on the 29th ult. The Lord Mayor presided, and amongst those present were Mr G. H. Heilbuth, chairman of the Music Committee of the Corporation, and Mrs Heilbuth, Mr Alderman and Sheriff Strong, Mr Sheriff Woodman and Mrs Woodman, Mr Alderman Morris, Dr. Cummings (Principal of the School), the Rev. F. Clementi-Smith, Sir F. and Lady Green, and Mr Carl Hentschel and other members of the Music Committee. There was a large audience.

Dr. CUMMINGS, in his report on the progress of the school during the past year, said that there were matters to regret in the loss of old and valued professors who by their good work had identified themselves with the best interests of the institution. On the other hand, their students had shown greater assiduity in making the study of the art of music more substantial and thorough. A proof of the excellence of their work was afforded by the fact that several students had recently left the school, having won valuable scholarships in other institutions. He made special mention of one student, Mr Gordon Burgess, who had not only won the school pianoforte prize, the Lady Jenkinson prize, and the school composition prize, but had also successfully passed the examination for the Fellowship of the Royal College of Organists, and gained the organ scholarship at Wadham College, Oxford, where he proposed matriculating and taking his degree. It was still more satisfactory to know that he remained a pupil of the school, and travelled to and from Oxford to have the advantage of their special instruction. By the generosity of a member of the Musicians' Company, they had a series of lectures on "University Examinations," which he hoped would do much to help students who contemplated adopting music as a profession. They were as anxious to assist these as they were to cater for the larger class of amateur musicians who desired to cultivate the various branches of music for the purpose of brightening their homes and adding an additional charm to their lives. They were also indebted to the Worshipful Company of Musicians for the medal presented by them, on Tuesday last, to their distinguished pupil Mr Henry Geehl; and still further for allocating to the school two handsome scholarships, with money provided by Mr Andrew Carnegie, a member of the company. Their thanks were due to those eminent professors who, not connected with the school, had generously given their time to hear and adjudicate the prizes—Sir Squire Bancroft, Herr Backhaus, Mr Lloyd Chandos, Mr Ellis Roberts, Dr. Markham Lee, Mr Herbert Bunning, Mdlle. Rosa Olitzka, Mr Percy Such, Mr W. Vaughan, Mr Miriam Timothy, and Miss Ada Crossley, who forwarded five guineas to be competed for by contralto vocalists next year.

The LADY MAYORESS then presented the medals, prizes, and certificates. The following are the principal awards:—School medals for 1904 (awarded to the first three associates for the year):—Gold medal, Catherine Higgs, pianoforte; silver medal, Frederick J. Daff, pianoforte; bronze medal, Julie C. Huntsman, elocution. The other associates are:—Ernest J. Downer, theory of music; Lillian E. Plummer, pianoforte; May Ottaway, elocution; Nellie Tubb, mandoline; Ethel C. Thomson, violoncello; Mabel M. Newland, mandoline; Adeline B. Carter, pianoforte; Florence Nightingale, pianoforte; and Minnie M. Macfarlane, singing. The special prizes were awarded as follows:—The Lord Mayor's prize, a purse of £5 5s. for soprano vocalists, to Dorothy Tinney; the Lady Mayoress's prize, a purse of £5 5s., for pianoforte students, to Wallis Bandey; the Sheriff's prize, a purse of £5 5s., for mezzo-soprano vocalists, to Ethel Sherlock; the Sheriff's prize, a purse of £5 5s., for contralto vocalists, to Cecile Vicars; the Knill Challenge Cup, with silver medal for an eminently deserving student, to Henry L. C. Finucane; the Chairman's prize, a gold medal for lady vocalists, to Grace Cole; the Davies gold medal, for a deserving student, to Jennie Hyman; the Worshipful Company of Musicians' silver medal, for the most distinguished student, to Henry E. Geehl; the Tillie gold medal, for a distinguished lady violin students, to Dorothy Bull; the Knight prize, a purse of £5 5s., for bass vocalist, to Edwin Evans; the Jenkinson prize, a purse of £5, for pianoforte student to M. Gordon Burgess; the Alexander prize, for elocution students, to Veronica Webb; the Tubbs' prize, a gold mounted violin bow, of the value of £10, for violin students, to William T. Ward; the Carwardine prize, a purse of £5 5s., for violin students, to Albert E. Cazaubon; the Spencer prize, a purse of £4 4s., for organ students, to Henry J. Tufnell; the Accompanist prize, to Kate Richards; the Domoney prize, a purse of £5 5s., for soprano and tenor vocalists, to Dorothy Tinney and E. Lewis Arney; the Hart prize, a violin, bow, and case, value thirty guineas (presented by Messrs Hart and Son), to Ella Ivimey; the Dove Memorial prize, for general excellence, assiduity, and industry, to Eric Leftwich; the Max Hecht scholarship, £10 per annum, for British vocalists studying German classics song, to Edith M. Smith; the Libotton Memorial prize, a violoncello bow (with inscription) and bronze memorial plaque, to Ethel C. Thomson; the Heller prize, a silver medal and one year's free tuition, for mandoline students, to Lily Selden; the Sight-singing prize, to Anna Forbes.

Votes of thanks were accorded to the Lord Mayor and the Lady Mayoress and to the Sheriffs for their attendance.

An excellent concert was provided by students of the school, under the direction of Dr. Cummings.

AT the Grand Theatre last Saturday evening pictures were thrown on the Biograph screen showing the results of the wanton outrage on Hull fishing boats perpetrated by the Baltic fleet. Views were presented of the battered holds of the damaged trawlers, a few of the Russian warships, and some of the relatives of the victims. Scenes of the funeral of the two fishermen who were killed by the Russian shells were also shown, to the accompaniment of Chopin's "Funeral March," played by the able orchestra under the conductorship of Mr W. T. Gliddon.

MR EDWARD COMPTON leaves Southampton to-day on the Union Castle Steamship Company's fine boat the Dunvegan Castle, for a cruise to the Mediterranean. He will be back early in December to rehearse with the Compton comedy company, in readiness for a prolonged tour, commencing on Dec. 26 at Leamington.

AT the Royal Opera House, Berlin, on Thursday, Weber's Die Freischütz was given by Royal command. The ticket-takers at the doors strictly exacted evening dress, and many ladies who appeared in street costumes rushed to the cloak-room, tore open their collars, and with the help of scissors knives, pins, and needles, prepared themselves to pass the doorkeepers with "low necks."

At the usual weekly meeting of the council, held last Tuesday, the hon. solicitors to the Actors' Association were requested to apply on behalf of certain members for payment of amounts claimed by them as damages for breach of agreements. Dr. Reginald Ingram, of 149, Warwick-street, Eccleston-square, was elected as an hon. medical officer to the Actors' Association. The secretary received instructions as to communicating with the hon. medical officers on the subject of their re-elections for the year 1905. The report of the Finance and General Purposes Committee was received, and it was resolved that next year the council should put in force the power given to them by Article 7 to determine the membership of those whose subscriptions are three months overdue.

AN application was made on Monday last to Mr Fordham at the North London police-court, by Mr C. V. Young, to license a little girl to play at the Dalston Theatre. Mr Young said the child was over twelve and a-half years old, and had been acting for several years; that she went on in the play several times at long intervals, and was out of the theatre by 10·45. Mr Fordham—Too late for so young a girl night after night; still, she looks in the perfection of health. How is she educated? Mr Young—She goes to school every day, wherever the company is, and her aunt, who is also in the company, looks after her in the theatre, and teaches her as well. The magistrate, handing his pencil and a sheet of paper to the child, asked her to write her name, which she did—"Minnie Ethel," without hesitation. Mr Fordham then set her two sums—one of addition and one of multiplication—these she did very quickly and with much confidence. The magistrate looked at them, and said, "Really, you have done both these sums as well as I could, for they are both correct, and you did them quicker than I could. Very well, Mr Young, though this child, in my opinion, should be in bed by 8 0 o'clock, she is evidently in the best of health, is particularly bright and happy, and very well educated for her age, and I shall grant the licence. The profession of the actor should rank as one of our learned professions; the theatre, when properly used, is a great educational power for those behind the curtain and those in front. Take your licence."

M. GASTON SERPETTE, the well-known composer, died in Paris on Thursday evening of heart disease. M. Serpette was born at Nantes in 1846, where he studied law; but developing a passion for music, he, in 1868, entered the Conservatoire. In 1871 he obtained the Grand Prize of Rome with a cantata, Jeanne d'Arc, which was produced successfully the same year at the Opéra. Returning from Italy he devoted himself to dramatic composition, and occasionally wrote musical criticisms. Among his works were the following:—Madame le Diable, La Princesse, Adam et Eve, Gamine de Paris, Surcouf, La Bonne de Chez Duval, La Petite Muette, La Branche Cassé, Le Manoir du Pic Tordu, and Le Moulin du Vert-galant.

THE dismantling of the Gaiety Theatre, Anglesey Castle, took place on Thursday. The theatrical drop and panel scenes were bought for £65. A local lady paid £40 for the French furniture of a private box from which the marquis's guests witnessed the performances. The drapery, which originally cost £180, only fetched £12. Adorning the walls of the theatre were a large number of pictures of the Marquis of Anglesey in different theatrical costumes. Sixteen pounds were paid for the first offered, but the remainder went at prices which averaged £9 each. An album which his pantomime company presented to the marquis in recognition of his début in the rôle of Pekoe only realised two guineas.

WITH regard to the temporary closing of the Paris Hippodrome, it appears that Mr Bostock lent his hall to a committee sitting in judgment on the safety of a theatre adjacent to his establishment. All that he got for his courtesy was to have the committee turn round and tell him his own building was not above improvement, and they promptly closed it. Mr Bostock, who is a man of resource, promptly asked what they wanted done, and complied at once with their requests or commands, opening his theatre again so quickly that the ungallant and ungrateful committeemen gasped and rubbed their eyes at the speed of this go ahead entrepreneur. On the fête day of All Saints Bostock took 17,000f., and refused 2,000 people admittance.

AT the Garrison Theatre, Shoeburyness, on Nov. 9 will be produced a one-act comedietta, by Major Gillespie-Addison, entitled The Risks We Run, respectfully dedicated to Mr Adolf Beck; and a one-act operetta by Herbert Harraden, entitled The Choice. The latter is performed in dumb show, the incidents being described in narrative form by an invisible soloist, accompanied by the orchestra.

NEW-CROSS EMPIRE.

A large and delighted audience assembled on Monday night to enjoy the excellent programme submitted by the management of this admirably conducted hall. First on the bill came clever Miss Jennie Belmore, who danced and sang with much go and spirit her Mephistophelian ditty, "I'm behind 'em." Mr Victor Travers, correctly termed "a quaint comedian," evoked roars of laughter w'th his comicalities, consisting mainly of patter and dance. He was succeeded by Les Burnelleys, who presented a remarkable gymnastic entertainment, consisting of a novel performance executed on stilts of varying height. A very attractive item was the scena by Mr Post Mason, in which he was assisted by a lady whose name did not appear. It consisted of a spirited rendering of "Son of the Desert am I," illustrated by attractive scenery and costumes. The famous Trapnell Family of acrobats next gave an exhibition of marvellous agility and grace. This turn was an excellent one, and the youthful artistes looked very nice in their fresh and pretty dresses. Werner and Reider, billed as the two Tyrolean stars, sang with power and expression, and their imitations of the nightingale and skylark were eminently successful. Mr Harry Lawson caused much amusement by his quaint rendering of a medley based on the titles of popular songs. Miss Winona Winter, assisted by Mr Walter Banks, presented a novel entertainment called When I Help Ma do the Washing. The scene opens with Miss Winter busy washing. A tramp enters, and learns that the lady aspires to be an actress. He persuades her to put on a stage costume and show him what she can do. He then sends a manager to interview her, with the result that her future success is a foregone conclusion. Clever Miss Millie Hylton contributed three taking songs—viz., "Suburban Belle," "Novaho," and the ever-popular "Knights of the King's Highway." She had a most flattering reception. The concluding item was the sporting sketch, by Joe Elvin and Wal Pink, entitled Over the Sticks. Mr Elvin, who is as amusing in this as in previous productions, was excellently supported by his capable company, and especially by Miss Florence Harcourt, Miss Amy B. Ellis, Mr Harry Low, and Mr Henry Gregory. This popular house continues to be packed at every performance. This fact is doubtless owing to the careful selection of attractions, and the unfailing courtesy of Mr H. Raymond and Mr H. Burdette.

THE sixth German season, under the direction of Hans Andresen and Max Behrend, will commence at the Great Queen-street Theatre on Monday. The house has been renovated throughout, and has been provided with new steam-heating and lighting arrangements. Messrs Andresen and Behrend have succeeded in securing the services of many first-class artists, in addition to the re-engagement of former favourites. The répertoire will consist of high-class plays, and some of the most recent successes in Germany have been secured for production. Performances will be given every evening during the week and there will be a matinée every Saturday. The prices for twenty subscription performances will be as follows:—Stalls, £6 10s.; dress circle (first and second rows), £5 10s.; dress circle (third to seventh rows), £4; upper circle, £2 10s.; and pit, £1 10s. At these prices subscribers may book either a fixed seat for a specified night or obtain a booklet of twenty coupons, which may be exchanged at the box-office against seats for any performance.

AT the Grand Theatre on Monday and during the week, the special early-door attraction will consist of an entirely new extravaganza, entitled Ancient Lights, which deals with a pre-historic age—"2,000 years before what you think," says the author, who for the present is unnamed. The little production is to last thirty minutes.

M. ERNEST LAROCHE has just finished a dramatisation of Tolstoi's "Anna Karenine" in collaboration with the well-known Russian writer, Nadège Nastri. It is to be produced in Paris towards the end of the season.

MISS LENA VERDI has been engaged by Howard and Wyndham to play the part of Dandini in the pantomime at the Tyne Theatre, Newcastle.

MESSRS LIEBLER and Co. have secured Madame Réjane, who will be seen at the Lyric Theatre, New York, for a period of some four weeks. The same managers have also engaged Signor Novelli, the famous Italian actor, for a short run at the New York Lyric Theatre, the production, in all probability, being Louis XI., with the title-rôle of which Signor Novelli has for a long time been associated.

MR CHARLES MACDONA'S principal company will present Three Little Maids next week at the Marlborough Theatre, Holloway, the company afterwards leaving London for the principal provincial centres.

A NEW musical comedy, Peggy Machree, will be produced by Mr C. E. Hamilton at the Prince of Wales's Theatre, Grimsby, on Monday. It will afterwards be taken on a short provincial tour prior to production at a West-end theatre. Miss Marie Dainton and Mr Denis O'Sullivan are included in the cast.

IN the King's Bench Division on Thursday, before Mr Justice Grantham and a special jury, was heard the case of Stephens and Another v. Fry and Sons, Ltd. The plaintiff, through a Mr Stafford, manager of the refreshment and programme department of the Grand Theatre, Fulham, made a contract under which the defendants undertook to supply their chocolates in fancy boxes to be sold in the theatre for a period of two years from June, 1902. Some time after the contract had been running Mr Stafford wished to have a different kind of box and cheaper chocolates. Permission for the change was obtained from defendants, and chocolates at 1d. per ounce instead of 2d. per ounce was put into the boxes. After the contract had run for eleven months it was determined by the defendants, and the present proceedings accordingly taken. For the defence, it was denied that permission was given to put a lower-priced chocolate in fancy boxes that were not defendant's boxes. The jury, without leaving the box, found for the defendants.

MR W. SCOTT PHIPP is running a Christmas season of ten weeks with Mr Edmund Edmunds, of the well-known Albert and Edmunds Troupe, four weeks of which will be at a London theatre with the pantomime Babes in the Wood. Mr Scott Phipp will be responsible for the book and the music.

MISS RAY WALLACE had the honour of entertaining the members of the London Press Club on Saturday at the Criterion, on the occasion of the club's annual dinner. Miss Wallace is the only lady artist who has ever been invited to this very select annual function. Her admirable imitations were enthusiastically received.

AT the Theatre Royal, Wallsend, Messrs Imbert and Wright's company has been appearing this week in the interesting drama, First Class. As Dan, the miser, Mr Fred C. Imbert causes continuous merriment; Mr G. M. Newell gives a powerful rendering of Lewis Montford; and Mr F. Trevor makes the most of the part of Philip Roscoe. Mr Leonard Clark is a smart Jack Stroud; Miss Ellen Armour is exceptionally clever as Peggy; and Miss L. Ingles is pleasing as Florence Franklin.

THE production of Henri Bataille's new play, Maman Colibri, at the Paris Vaudeville has been postponed till Tuesday. Up to that date, therefore, Les Trois Anabaptists, by Berr le Turique, will continue in the evening bill.

PROVINCIAL THEATRICALS

SITTINGBOURNE.

TOWN HALL.—Lessee, Mr G. W. Bowes.—One of Miss Inez Howard's companies in the original drama Between Two Women was at this hall on Monday. The piece was well staged. The rôles of Violet Thornton and Carmen De Savareaux were admirably taken by Miss Bessie Ellis and Miss Lilla Wilde, while Harry Millard was capital in the part of the hero. All the other characters were in suitable hands. Mr Henry Chattell was the business-director, and Mr Bowes made the local arrangements.

SOUTHEND-ON-SEA.

EMPIRE THEATRE.—Managing Director, Mr W. Marlow; Manager, Mr W. Marlow, jun.—Mr John Denton's powerful company is here this week, and the new sensational melodrama, in four acts, entitled A Modern Judas, is being very successfully presented before good audiences. Mr Harry Browne depicts in fine style the character of Mr James Rivers; Mr Frank Beresford finds a difficult part in Jack Vasasour, and which is capitally expounded; Captain Melbourne is most characteristically portrayed by Mr Percy Rhodes; Mr Willie Scott is a mirth-making Tom Hopkins; Mr John Denton is an excellent Elkanah Pearce, Mr Trueman Towers is well suited as Bennett; Miss Dolly Harcourt wins favour as Polly Hopkins, Miss Ada Palmer is an admiring Agatha Pearce, Miss Kate Walbran plays her part of Elise very creditably; and Claire Rivers finds an able and clever exponent in Miss Violet King.

SOUTH SHIELDS.

THEATRE ROYAL.—Lessees and Managers, Messrs J. and F. Coulson.—Excellent houses are appreciating Fredk. Melville's cleverly written drama, Between Two Women, which the popular lessees have under engagement for the current week. Mr Fredk. Melville's company includes Mr Albert Ward, who is extremely popular here. His fine declamatory and restraintful powers, aided by a handsome presence, are adequate abilities which are advantageously used as the Rev. Phillip Carton. A bold and dignified treatment is given Henry Earl of Millard, by Mr Sidney Price. The Harry of Mr Harry Marlow is buoyantly natural. Another portrayal meriting individual praise is Mr Fred Morgan's James Durwood. The petty worries of Jack Pringle are irresistibly interpreted by Mr Tubby Edlin, whose antics evoke considerable mirth. Miss Sybil Hammersley pleasingly sustains Polly Pop; Miss Alice Bower's acting and singing as the Blind Boy are plaintive and touching; the title-rôle is represented by Miss Marie Robson as the true-hearted Violet Thornton; and Miss Marita Valdar appears as the scheming Carmen De Savereaux. Both these ladies act with contrasting charm, grace, and emotion, quite in harmony with their rôles. The smaller parts are interesting, and especial mention should be made of Messrs Graham Woods (Major Strangeways), Fredk. Sandy (Dick Burgess), J. W. Waters (Jacques Spado), and Miss Winnie Morgan (Lady Customer).

EMPIRE PALACE THEATRE.—Proprietor, Mr Richard Thornton; General Manager, Mr Frank Allen; Resident-Manager, Mr Geo. F. Thompson.—A pleasing bill is submitted this week, including Fred Ginnett in his laughable sketch, Rejected Remounts. Abel and Welsh evoke roars of laughter by their distinctly droll patter. Dashing Lily Burnand renews acquaintance here, and Katie Holloway is another comedienne of noteworthy charm. The songs and dances submitted by the Eight of Hearts are good. Shavo is a comedy juggler of merit, and Harry Dent is to the fore with two excellent songs. Blanche Haddon, a ballad vocalist, enlists admirers; and Ted Cowan, comedian, is successful.

TIVOLI.—Proprietors and Manager, Councillor J. K. Hall and Mr Jos. Sweeney.—Another meritorious programme is headed by the Mudlarks, whose ability in song and story is agreeably acknowledged. Wee Mona is a charming child artist. A good comedy act by the Padleys, and some amusing songs by J. C. Morris, comedian, are appreciated. Louis Kerno, coon artiste, is an old Shields pierrot and therefore a favourite. Rose Tilley, comedienne; Harry Bent, mimic; and Carlotta Lunn, vocalist; all submit able turns.

SPENNYMOOR.

CAMBRIDGE THEATRE.—Lessee, Mr Harding Thomas; Resident Manager, Mr Herbert Vere.—Mr Robert Perris's company is presenting the American melodrama A Fight for Millions here this week. The scenery is very pretty, and is capitally staged. Mr Perris as Ted Manley submits a sound impersonation; Miss Eva Purcell is decidedly good as Pearl Rivers; Mr Horace Booth depicts the villainy of Richard Dudley in the darkest of shades; Miss K. Eckhart gives a powerful delineation of Helen Dudley; Miss Fanny Williams appears with credit as Mrs Hudson Rivers; and little Winnie Acton is very pleasing as Madge. Mr Larry Clements and Mr Fred Acton afford much amusement as Willie Neverwork and Solomon Moses respectively, and Miss Gertie Douglas makes a sprightly Betty.

ST. HELENS.

THEATRE ROYAL AND OPERA HOUSE.—General Manager, Mr M'Leod Loader.—Messrs George Edwardes and Charles Frohman's company opened on Monday for the first time here with Are You a Mason? Mr Anthony Fawcett acts well as George Fisher; Mr Harry Ashford is a capital Amos Bloodgood; Mr Stephen Wentworth is exceedingly good as Frank Perry; Mr Tom Mowbray scores a genuine success as John Halton; Mr Frank Ridley is excellent as Hamilton Travers, as is also Mr Valentine O'Connor as Ernest Morrison. Miss Harriet Trench's portrayal of Mrs Bloodgood could not be improved upon; Mrs Perry has a good representative in Miss Violet Graham; and Miss Lily Beagle as Annie, Miss Isla Glynn as Lulu, Miss Mabel Younge as Mrs Halton, Miss Lucy Edwin as Lottie, and Miss Gertrude Spencer as Fanchon Armytage are all deserving of mention.

HIPPODROME.—Proprietors, Messrs Barrasford, Sley, and Willmot; Resident-Manager, Mr A. V. Carnell.—Miss Vesta Victoria, star comedienne, is at the head of the bill here, and is a decided success. The programme also includes excellent turns by Mr J. H. Scotland, baritone; Mdlle. Vanda, in a juggling act on rolling globes; Harrison Brothers, comedians; Rita and Roma, vaudeville entertainers; Mr Charles R. Whittle, comedian; the Cullane Trio, in The Dude's Dilemma; and La Belle Tosca, wire performer.

STOCKTON-ON-TEES.

THEATRE ROYAL.—Proprietress, Mrs Weldon Watts; General Manager, Mr Sidney Bacon; Acting-Manager, Mr R. G. Elder.—Mr W. W. Kelly's company in the new version of East Lynne is here. As Archibald Carlyle Mr Wm. Heilbronn makes the most of his rôle; Mr W. T. Clifford's Francis Levison leaves little to be desired; and the Justice Hare of Mr Robert Wilton is likewise a success. Excellent comedy is given by Mr W. Faulkner Cox as Murty O'Flynn; Miss B. Stewart's Cornelia Carlyle is a good character study; and Miss Agnes Imlay's Lady Isabel is full of pathos.

SUTTON-IN-ASHFIELD.

KING'S THEATRE.—Proprietors, The Sutton Theatre Syndicate; General Manager, Captain Clayton.—Mr Frank Lindo's capital domestic drama Home, Sweet Home opened here on Monday to a crowded house. Mr Lindo is excellent as David Armitage; Mr G. F. Black as Stephen Armitage plays the rôle of the captain of the lifeboat crew very effectively; the heavy part of Lucas Lyle, the Duke's secretary, finds an able exponent in Mr Arthur Rodney; whilst Miss Ivy Ellaline Thorne (Sybil Fay) and Miss Marion Wakeford (Joan) delight the audience with their refined comedy. The scenery and effects are also worth a word of commendation.

STOCKPORT.

NEW THEATRE ROYAL.—Sole Owner and Manager, Mr Charles Revill; Acting-Manager, Mr Wm. Revill.—The visits of Mr J. W. Turner's English Opera company are invariably welcome here, and the usual hearty reception has been accorded it by large and fashionable audiences throughout the week. Lily of Killarney was presented on Monday, with Mr J. W. Turner in excellent form as Miles-na-Coppaleen and Miss Constance Bellamy a most pleasing and successful Lily. Mr Tom Griffiths as Danny Mann was admirable, his vocal efforts being repeatedly encored. Faust was the attraction on Tuesday, and on Wednesday The Bohemian Girl was presented. The Waterman, Il Trovatore, Daughter of the Regiment, and Maritana are also in the bill.

OHMY'S CIRCUS.—The Henry H. Hamilton's Excursions close this week a most successful three weeks' stay.

SUNDERLAND.

AVENUE, LIMITED.—Managing-Director, Mr Chas. E. Machin; Acting-Manager, Mr Percival Craig.—Mr Geo. Dance's company is paying a return visit here this week in The Girl from Kay's. As Winnie Harborough Miss Simeta Marsden is seen to advantage. Mr H. C. Barry as Max Hoggenheimer gives a capital representation of the part. He is ably assisted by Mr Leslie Roy-Cathie as the Hon. Percy Fitzthistle. Miss Maisie North was pleasing as Ellen, while Miss Alice Russon capably fills the part of Nora Chalmers. Mr Charles Hanbury is good as Harry Gordon.

ROYAL, LIMITED.—Managing-Director, Mr Chas. E. Machin; Acting Manager, Mr Percival Craig.—Messrs Haddon and Loader's company in The King of Thieves occupies the boards here this week. Mr Jack Haddon as Galston, Miss Nellie Thorne Hallam as Mary Galston, Mr John Cecil as Travers, and Mr E. Munro as Sir Gilbert Redville are prominent. In the comedy parts Mr Harry Liddle, Mr R. W. Bedford, Miss Lottie Pearce, and Miss Marguerite Thorne are equally good.

PALACE THEATRE OF VARIETIES, LIMITED.—Managing-Directors, Messrs Livermore Bros.; Acting-Manager, Mr George V. Wybrow; Secretary and Treasurer, Mr Alfred Brown.—Rohda Brothers submit in clever style an equilibristic act; Verto contributes a first-rate musical turn; Lily Langtry is as lively as ever; and F. H. Douglas, monologue artiste, is amusing. Ailsa Douglas, the Lancashire soprano; Collins and Rice, comedy speciality artistes; Walter Stockwell, character comedian; Olive Trio, comediennes and dancers; and Vernon's animated pictures complete the programme.

SWANSEA.

GRAND THEATRE.—Proprietors, Messrs David Allen and Sons; Lessee and Manager, Mr Frank Boyce; Acting-Manager, Mr Walter Bellian.—A Chinese Honeymoon is again here, played by Mr Charles Dance's company. Mr Helier Le Maistre makes a very good Emperor, and Mr Rudolph Kloss scores as the Lord Chancellor. Tom Hatherton is well played by Mr J. Warren Foster, and Mr Gus Wheatman keeps the house highly amused as Mr Pineapple. Miss Elsie Carew is remarkably good as Mrs Brown; Miss Nellie Wigley as Soo-Soo and Miss Dot Stephens as Mrs Pineapple are excellent, and sing well. Miss Gwennie Harcourt as Fi-Fi is also greatly appreciated.

NEW STAR.—Lessee and Manager, Mr T. Morton Powell; Acting-Manager, Mr William Coutts.—The American drama, The Klondyke Nugget, now on its farewell tour, has been the attraction during the week, played by Mr S. F. Cody's company.

NEW EMPIRE.—Managing-Director, Mr Oswald Stoll; Acting-Manager, Mr Albert Mitchell.—The programme here includes the Kremo Family, an exceedingly clever troupe of Risley artistes; Fred Earle, eccentric comedian; Amy Russell, a charming vocalist; Alice Ormonde, a pleasing comedienne; Walter King, a capital vocal comedian; Burt Shepard, a good American comedian; Horace Wheatley, comedian and expert dancer; the Rayfords, comedy artistes; Downe and Langford, eccentric comedians and capital dancers; and Walter Groves and company in the comical sketch Artful Jim.

SWINDON.

QUEEN'S THEATRE.—Sole Lessee and Responsible Manager, Mr Alfred Manners; Musical Director, Mr F. H. Lucas.—The successful Adelphi drama The Bells of Hastemere was staged for the first time in this town on Monday and witnessed with much interest and enthusiasm by a crowded audience. It was played by a capable company, under the personal management of Mr Chas. A. Chandler, Mr H. Whyte being responsible for the capital staging. Mr Leonard Yorke's fine impersonation of Frank Beresford was a brilliant achievement, for which he was deservedly applauded. The scheming John Silkstone was cleverly depicted by Mr Montague Turner, while Mr C. A. Chandler as Captain Vere and Mr Douglas Hamilton as Matthew Brookfield were each seen to distinct advantage. Mr Chas. Cecil as Reuben Armstrong was eminently successful, and kept the audience in good spirits, and the part of Joseph Thorndyke was excellently undertaken by Mr Fred F. Allen. Miss Harrietta Polini submitted a most effective delineation of Evelyn Brookfield; Miss Mary Hardacre deserved a full measure of credit for her admirable study of Mary Northcote; and Miss Stafford Smith and Miss Florence Chandler were equally successful and pleasing in their respective parts.

TON-Y-PANDY.

ROYAL.—Lessees, Messrs Carlton and Duckworth; General Manager, Mr S. Duckworth; Acting-Manager, Mr H. Counsell.—Mr and Mrs Wm. Giffard with their No. 1 company, in The World's Desire, occupy the boards here. Mr Giffard shows a thorough grasp of the character of the Hon. Ellis Tridley; as the twin brothers, Robert and Henry Selkirk, Mr C. Rean doubles most effectively; Nathaniel Mutley, a drunken solicitor, is well played by Mr Geo. Child; Mrs Wm. Giffard evinces considerable power in the rôle of Dora Mutley; and Miss Ella Seton ably portrays Helen Berkshaw.

HIPPODROME.—Proprietors, Messrs Carlton and Duckworth; General Manager, Mr S. Duckworth; Resident-Manager, Mr F. Burland.—Topping the bill here are Starr and Leslie, who gain unstinted applause for their clever speciality act. The Gentle Brothers Lang evoke laughter. Remaining from last week we have Frank Craig (Coffee Cooler) and Vera and Royal, both of which turns are highly appreciated. Judge's cockatoos give a good show. Happy Attwood and Miss Bouverie Pleydell sing in a well-approved style.

TORQUAY.

THEATRE ROYAL.—Managing-Director and Licensee, Mr R. Smeedon; Secretary, Mr A. Pearce.—Mr George Edwardes's San Toy company paid a return visit on Monday. Miss Dora Harradine made an acceptable San Toy, Miss Florence Arnold a lively Maid, and Miss Mabel Lavelle a pretty Poppy. Mr. G. J. Williams was a typical British Consul, Mr Cliffe Davies a properly ponderous Emperor, whilst Mr Alfred W. Clark was good as Yen How, and Mr Alfred Beers funny as Li.

MISS WARD, who has been playing Honor Symes in Her Fatal Past, has had a very nasty attack of influenza this last week at Theatre Royal, Stratford, E. So suddenly and acutely did the "Grippe" lay hold of her that—almost at an hour's notice—she was obliged to relinquish her part, which was undertaken by Miss Millane. Miss Ward, we are glad to hear, is on the highway to recovery.

THE new wonder child, Mischa Elman, the twelve-year-old Russian violinist, gave a concert at Berlin on Saturday, and gained a complete triumph. He is considered by local critics to be superior even to little Franz Von Vecsey, and is said to be quite the most marvellous player of his age ever heard there.

THE ERA

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 5, 1904.

SOCIETY AND THE DRAMA.

In one of Mr W. H. MALLOCK'S novels there is an incident which is supposed to occur at the time when an East End mob is marching through the streets in angry procession to Hyde-park. A member of Society, the son of a small tradesman who has managed to work his way up into a "good" social set, comes amongst them radiating with delight because a man in the mob has thrown mud at him, and called him a (sanguinary) aristocrat. We fear a similar spirit may account for some of the objections which have been made to Mr SUTRO'S clever play The Walls of Jericho, which was produced at the Garrick Theatre on Monday. The London world may be divided into people who are in Society, people who are trying to get into Society, and people who have no chance of ever getting into Society, and are embittered accordingly. Those who are really in the best society will not misunderstand Mr SUTRO'S meaning, but the other two classes are very likely to do so. The individual who is in what we many term the literary and artistic Borderland, and, of course, holds a brief for the class just above him which he hopes ultimately to enter, will pooh-pooh the author's protest; while the third class—the sort of people who read Reynolds' and agree with Mr JOHN BURNS'S description of British army officers as "gilded popinjays"—will applaud Jack Frobisher's orations without discrimination and will wish more power to Mr SUTRO'S elbow. To them his attack will seem directed against Society as a whole, that wicked class where, in gilded salons, debauchery is the rule and decency the exception, and Vice and Dissipation go hand in hand.

Mr SUTRO, therefore, will find himself placed between the cross-fires of misconception, and he may well pray to be delivered from his friends as well as from his enemies. An author should be judged, however, by what he writes, not by what his critics may imagine him to have written; and Mr SUTRO distinctly intimates that Frobisher's remarks apply, not to Society as a whole, but only to a particular fraction of it. The outbursts of the irritated Queenslander in The Walls of Jericho must be taken as the expressions of feeling of a particular "personage of the drama," and not as sermons interjected by the playwright. That the personage should speak as he would have spoken in real life is the Horatian receipt for dramatic realism; and what Frobisher says is just what a man in his plight would say. The Australian, of course, has acted absurdly. With all the different "sets" in society to choose from, he has selected his spouse from what used to be called a "fast" one. In one of FIELDING'S novels there is a misanthrope, who has come to grief from choosing his bosom friend from a gambling hell and his wife from a house of ill-fame. Frobisher has only himself to blame for his foolishness; but, having got himself into the difficulty, he takes the only way out of it, and that leads him out of the country. We can, by a great effort, imagine Lady Alethea living a decent and useful life in Queensland; but we cannot fancy her still in London and in any set but that to which she belongs when she is first introduced to us on the stage.

In the interest of dramatic art we protest against an author's work being misinterpreted to suit the prejudices of a clique or a class. Unfortunately for the ignorant, the particular division of London Society which is most in evidence is the most frivolous and vicious. The great success of our fashionable restaurants is caused by the rage for display that is one of the characteristics of the modern smart set, which has a childish delight in playing with fire and parading its faults and follies. As the particular set in question in its ordinary conversation is accustomed to infer its immorality, it would probably be much offended if anyone accused it of virtue. Adultery is an eternal form of idle enjoyment, and gambling is another. Given a number of average men and women with plenty of money and nothing particular to do, and they are certain to engage in both of the above-mentioned pursuits. The error is to take a separate and "showy" section of Society as representative of the mass. Two-thirds, at least, of Society is industrious and ambitious. The component parts of the major section are the Royalties with their wives and families, and the diplomats, the wealthy bankers and financiers, the lawyers, judges, divines, soldiers, doctors, the statesmen, and the leading artists of all kinds, with their wives and families. This Society is regarded by the "smart" or "fast" set as "slow" and "frumpish," but it is of real importance and value; whereas the "smart" set is of no importance whatever, except to the restaurateurs, milliners, and other "fancy" tradesfolk. But it is just what the "outsiders" take to be Society; instead of being only a department thereof. It is absolutely absurd to suppose that adultery can be common amongst the old aristocracy, amongst the industrial aristocracy of Jewish and German extraction, and amongst the Parliamentary, political, and official classes. Unless we suppose that the complaisant husband is as common in England as he is reputed to be across the Channel, the result of adultery being widely practised would be a constant succession of divorce cases in "high life." Unfortunately the fast set in London society is the most accessible from below, besides being, as we have said, the most in evidence. The point at which the Bohemian and the littérateur touch the monde is the rotten point. A man who tastes the brown bit in an imperfect pear is very apt to inveigh against pears altogether. Frobisher, in The Walls of Jericho is a rank "outsider." He naturally imagines that his father-in-law is a typical English peer, and that his wife is a typical English lady of fashion. A good many people who will see the piece at the Garrick Theatre may share the delusion. As an indictment of a certain social section, the satire is quite warranted by facts; and it approaches the subject in quite a different spirit from the half-hearted, pandering, and weakly indulgent one which has distinguished some of our recent "Society" plays.

"THE LADY BURGLAR."

A One-Act Comedy, by Charles H. F. Brookfield, Produced at the Royal Court Theatre, Liverpool, on Thursday, Nov. 3.

Mr Darcy FitzHerbert .. Mr JAMES WELCH
Miss Honora Macfarlane Miss AUDREY FORD

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

A smartly written little trifle, though somewhat long drawn out, is The Lady Burglar. There is an element of originality in the story, and wherever played by a couple of capable artistes the piece will find acceptance. Miss Macfarlane, fresh from college, and cherishing some advanced ideas regarding the unequal distribution of wealth, resolves to put into practice her contention that possessors of too much should give the surplus to those who have not enough by secretly entering, during his absence, the bachelor flat of Darcy FitzHerbert, K.C., whose acquaintance she had recently made at a social gathering. The idea of a lady thieving may seem somewhat strained, but the author is responsible for that. Whilst she is gathering together some of his property, the barrister unexpectedly enters and discovers his strange visitor. Then some neat dialogue ensues, after which he produces from his curios a pair of handcuffs, with which he playfully fastens the lady until he investigates the extent of her depredations. The natural conclusion to the affair is apparent at an early stage by the young man's repeated assertion that she has stolen more than his property. Eventually the lady promises to abandon her burglarising proclivities, and the all-along expected love match is the outcome of the night's adventure. In the hands of Mr Welch and Miss Ford the smart curtain-raiser ran merrily, and provoked much laughter. As hinted, a slight curtailment would be an improvement.

AT the Southwark County Court, on Monday, was heard the claim by May Burgess Barratt, an actress, against Charles Henry Houghton, a theatrical agent, of Waterloo-road, for £6. The lady was engaged by the defendant as understudy for the leading part in My Wife, which his company was touring, at a salary of 27s. a-week. She was at Sunderland when she received a telegram telling her to go immediately to Wolverhampton. There, however, at the Prince of Wales's Theatre, she was informed that there was nothing for her to do. Houghton told her, when he came down, to take the leading juvenile part.

WHEN the plaintiff asked Houghton for something on account of salary he offered her eighteenpence. Afterwards the company became stranded, and she received 6s. The defendant said that as the plaintiff did not reply to his telegram he sent another lady. His Honour—I think it very hard upon these poor women that you should treat them like this. These poor women come up here time after time and tell me they have been sent travelling about the country and cannot get paid. Judgment was given for the plaintiff for £6 and costs.

THE prosperity of the Guildhall School of Music is sufficiently attested by the fact that at the concert on Saturday last it was announced that 2,500 pupils were studying under the admirable professors of the institution which Dr. Cummings so successfully controls. The concert of Saturday was honoured by the presence of the Lord Mayor, the Lady Mayoress, and the Sheriffs, and the Lady Mayoress distributed a great number of medals, prizes, and certificates, the most successful of all the students being Mr Burgess, who, besides the remarkable gifts he has displayed at the school, has passed an examination at the Royal College of Organists and has gained the organ scholarship at Wadham College, Oxford. Another brilliant pupil was Miss Dorothy Ball, who has studied under M. Johannes Wolff, and clever students also deserving recognition were Miss Holbrook, Miss Grace Cole, Miss Finney, Miss Ethel Wynne, and Messrs Alfred Carr and Leftwich. Dr. Camming was greeted with the greatest enthusiasm, and may be heartily congratulated on the splendid success attending his labours, the Guildhall School at the present moment having reached a position unequalled during the twenty-five years it has been established, and giving promise of still greater triumphs in the future.

The West Londoners are staunch lovers of melodrama. They love a bloodthirsty villain, a chivalrous hero, and a heroine laden with tribulation; and to woo their suffrages with the frivolity of musical comedy says much for the boldness of the Messrs Bailey, who put on a brand new piece—spiced with variety and scintillating with gems of melody—on Monday. It is from the pen of Mr Reginald Bacchus, a young writer of considerable ability and no little poetic fancy, and the music is from the practised and accomplished pen of Dr. F. Osmond Carr, who was associated with such successful productions as Morocco Bound, His Excellency, In Town, and others. The partnership is undoubtedly a fortunate one, and Miss Mischief, which will proceed on tour next Monday, should find her pretty deceptions, her artless coquetry, and her fascinations all conquering. She is an heiress is this happy little maid, and her name is Kitty Malone. She arrives from Argentina at the home at Boulogne of her uncle and guardian, Admiral Sir Hannibal Bethune—who, by the caprice of the author, is also Hereditary Grand Duke of Bildenbad, in Bavaria—and finds that her maid, Mary Anne Smith, who has preceded her with her diamonds, valued at £100,000, has been mistaken for the mistress. She thinks it excellent fun to keep up the deception. Captain Jack Bethune, who has met Kitty at Dover as the heiress, is very naturally surprised to discover on his arrival at his uncle Hannibal's that Kitty has become Mary Anne, and that the latter is now posing as the heiress. It makes no difference to his affection, however, and the impecunious Admiral, who is determined that his nephew shall marry money, becomes highly indignant at the young officer's obstinacy in sticking to the pretty little girl he had met at Dover, and at his refusal to heighten his worldly prospects by a marriage with the supposed heiress. Mary Anne, of course, has more than one suitor. Her alleged wealth secures her the attentions of Private Harris, Captain Bethune's soldier servant, and of a dude—Lord Percy Fitz-Sherry—the nephew of Lady Orrery, an impecunious member of "the smart set" who has designs on Hiram Q. Beg, an American speculator and enterpriser. Beg proposes to the Admiral that he shall form a syndicate with the object of bringing the town of Bildenbad up to date by building there a casino and establishing it as a fashionable gambling resort. The proposal is accepted, and in the second act the whole of the characters arrive at the Bavarian town. Kitty, who has been charged with the theft of her own jewels, has escaped with Mary Anne, and both are found at Bildenbad. The casino does not answer the expectations of Beg. There are no profits, and, as he says, there must be a leakage somewhere. The syndicate is being robbed by Count Von Himmelblau, the chamberlain, whose defalcations are discovered when Private Harris is appointed croupier. A braggart German prince, it appears, is seeking a duel with one of the students, and young Bethune, who has graduated at the University of Bildenbad, draws the black token by which he is chosen to fight. The "prince" is none other than Miss Mischief, and her identity is discovered. Kitty proclaims herself to be the real heiress, and Jack Bethune, having won £25 000 at the tables, gives it to Mary Anne Smith in order that she may become the dowered bride of Private Harris, who has a very comic duel with Hiram Beg.

This is a sufficient outline of the plot, which gives opportunity for much clever comedy business, some admirable songs, some spirited concerted numbers, and some fascinating dancing. Mr Bacchus is not only ingenious enough to contrive comic situations, but he can write dialogue that smacks of smartness. The members of the company, too, engaged by Mr Godfrey Lamplugh work together with inspiriting heartiness, and the chorus especially may be complimented on the singing of the finale to the first act, a number that is particularly fascinating and well composed. The cast is headed by Mr Fred Eastman, who plays the part of Private Harris. Such a genuine comedian, given plenty of opportunity, is bound to be a success, and his resourcefulness is never at fault. He sings early in the piece "How I Won the V.C.," with the refrain "Just the three of us—no more," and the liveliness of the number catches the fancy of the West Londoners. A "bathing" song is another diverting item to which Mr Eastman does not fail to do complete justice; and he is encored in "A Croupier's Life," which he sings in the second act. Mr Eastman is most loyally supported in his songs by Misses Desmond, Poppy Lytton, Zara Kriesberg, and Mdlle Thelma, a quartet of young ladies whose piquancy as the pet parlourmaids of the old Admiral is quite irresistible. They dance exceedingly well, and their gyrations and high-kicking are much enjoyed. The title-rôle is capitally sustained in every way by Miss Evelyn Hughes, who has the rare merit of being a good listener. She makes love very prettily and tenderly, and, besides, is an arch and dainty dancer. An excellent number and one that is quite up to date is Kitty's song, "Merely Mary Anne," which she sings in the character of a housemaid, and herein Miss Hughes scores a genuine triumph. "From far distant Argentine" is another of her solos, and still another is "My Indian Maid," in both of which her refinement of style is very apparent. Miss Crissie Francess revels in the low comedy part of Mary Anne Smith, and is exceedingly funny in her love scenes with Mr Fred Eastman. She has an excellent solo in "Maisie married a millionaire," with a lilting melody that has been caught up during the week by the music-loving patrons of the theatre. Mr Cecil Curtiss as Captain Bethune sings some excellent sentimental ballads, in one of which, "Let my love be my sword," he is encored, and he, with Mr Eastmar, Miss Hughes, and Miss Francess, shares the success of the quartet "A duty we owe to Society." Mr J. C. Bland is the incarnation of good humour as Hiram Q. Beg, and his incidental Dutch business is intensely funny and his dance clever. Miss Eileen Guilbert is an attractive Lady Orrery, and sings a lyric which we may call "Style." Mr G. H. Liot as Lord Percy Fitz-Sherry plays the part on the traditional lines, and is decidedly amusing in his fatuousness. Mr T. E. Conover is sufficiently bluff and splenetic as the Admiral, and sings "I'm seventy-one to-day" with rare gusto. The part of the Chamberlain is effectively handled by Mr G. Elsmere, and Miss Ella Douglas, Miss Reichenberg, and Miss Nellie Rene are seen to advantage in minor parts. The Chevalier Le Grand conducts with great care, and secures an excellent ensemble. On the first night author and composer had to respond to a very hearty call. The scenery is excellent, the plage at Boulogne-sur-Mer being a pretty bit of brushwork. There should be a hearty reception awaiting Miss Mischief in the provinces.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

PARIS, THURSDAY, NOV 3.—There can be no doubt that the Nouveautés is one of the luckiest playhouses not only in Paris but in the whole of France. Nearly every piece brought out there turns out a success; and it looks very much as if M. Michaud, the shrewd Nouveautés manager, will not have to alter his programme for a long time to come. There certainly is nothing novel in the plot of MM. Hennequin and Bilhaud's new work. We have the same old situations, the same kind of intrigue we find in other vaudevilles. But the two clever playwrights possess a remarkably light touch, and have imparted a special charm to the work by the delicate and skilful manner in which they have handled some of the most risqué situations. Barentin has a mistress, Emilienne, of whom he is very jealous, and a wife, Gilberte, of whom he has not the least suspicion, not knowing, of course, that Gilberte is on the point of succumbing to Gaston Challindrey, diplomatist and lady-killer. In fact, she has promised Gaston to call on him in his garçonnière, but a scruple holds her back. It is her husband's birthday, and as she does not want to celebrate this event in that form she unbosoms herself to her friend Antoinette Planturel, and asks her to call on Gaston and tell him that she (Gilberte) has decided never to be his mistress. And Antoinette is all the more pleased to accept this mission as it will give her an opportunity of seeing again the fascinating Gaston, whom she once met and has never forgotten. When Antoinette makes her appearance in Gaston's chambers the latter is somewhat taken aback, but Antoinette is pretty, and things might have taken a queer turn, when Antoinette suddenly hears her husband's voice in the next room. He has made a mistake, and has entered Gaston's apartment instead of going one story higher. For on this floor above lives his mistress, Emilienne, the same Emilienne who bestows her favour upon Gilberte's husband. The plot here becomes very entangled, and it requires all the skill of the dramatists to unravel it properly. Gilberte does not break her marriage vows, but it is Antoinette who succumbs and becomes Gaston's mistress. The piece was admirably played. Mdlle. Cerny scored a real triumph as Antoinette, a rôle that required to be handled with the utmost delicacy. I know of very few actresses who could have achieved this feat. Mdlle. Carlix acted very cleverly the part of Gilberte, the woman oscillating between her conjugal duties and the desire to embark upon a little adventure. M. Noblet never strives after effect. With the slightest inflection of the voice, with a gesture he can speak volumes, and these qualities stand him in good stead in the not easy rôle of Gastor. M. Germain did not make too many grimaces, and M. Torin's impersonation of a manservant was perfection itself.

SOME ten years ago we had here a Napoleonic epidemic, which, however, did not last long. It now looks as if we were to have a fresh outbreak, for we are promised a Napoléon, by M. Martin Laya, at the Porte-Saint-Martin, and the Ambigu will also produce the great Corsican in La Belle Marseillaise.

"M. DE LA PALISSE."
Operette, in Three Acts, by MM. Robert De Flers and G. De Caillavet, Music by M. Claude Terrace, Produced at the Variétés, Nov. 2.

Baron Placide De La Palisse	M. BRASSEUR
Don Diego	M. CLAUDIUS
Comte Bertrand	M. ALBERTHAL
Beni-Zouzou	M. VAUTHIER
Domingue	M. BERNARD
Inésita	Mdlle. LAVAILLIÈRE
Héloise	Mdlle. LAPORTE
Dorette	Mdlle. LANTHENAY
Augustine	Mdlle. FOURNIER
Françoise	Mdlle. DORLAC
Lola	Mdlle. DEBACKER
Biscotin	Mdlle. LAVERNIÈRE

The new operette will not set the Seine on fire, but both libretto and music are pleasing, and, as usual at the Variétés, the new work is magnificently staged. The story is by no means complicated. Placide De La Palisse, the descendant of M. De La Palisse—who, as every French schoolboy will tell you, "was alive a quarter of an hour before his death"—is a good young man whose sole ambition is to lead a quiet life among his ducks, chickens, and cows. Anxious to perpetuate his race, yet knowing that woman is always a disturbing element in a man's existence, he decides upon marrying Héloise De La Verdure, a widow of mature age, and, therefore, past the age of frivolity. Fate, however, has decided otherwise. Bertrand, a brilliant cavalier, and the very opposite of his cousin Placide, makes his appearance. Bertrand is on his way on a diplomatic mission to Spain, with a train of followers, among whom is Dorette, a delightful damsel. Bertrand then sprains his foot, and, unable to continue his journey, begs of Placide to start for Spain in his stead. Placide does not relish the idea of leaving his quiet retreat, but he goes nevertheless, and arrives in Seville, where he falls in with old Don Diego, the governor of the town, who has a charming niece, Inésita. Placide at once loses his heart. His fate is sealed, or rather Inésita seals it for him by carrying him off, whilst old Diego runs away with Dorette. The music, well in keeping with the story, is tuneful and capitally orchestrated. The interpretation was fairly good. M. Brasseur was always amusing; M. Claudius sufficiently grotesque as the Governor; M. Alberthal very elegant in the rôle of Bertrand; Mdlle. Eve Lavaillière full of entrain; Mdlle. Lanthenay a fascinating Dorette; and Mdlle. Leonie Laporte amusing as the amorous elderly Héloise without being ridiculous.

M. CAMILLE DE SAINTE-CROIX, the talented author of Gildis, the great work to be brought out soon at the Odéon, is anxious to contradict the rumour that he intends to take over the Odéon management. There is not and there has never been a question of this. M. Ginisty has no intention whatsoever of throwing up his post, nor has M. De Sainte-Croix the desire of replacing him.

FIRE IN A THEATRE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

Sir,—At the slight fire last week at the Theatre Royal, Edinburgh, while Mr Martin Harvey's company were rehearsing, far from the actors and actresses hastily leaving the theatre, it was they who got out the hose and subdued the fire before the fire-engines arrived. As no notice has been taken of this fact, I should be greatly obliged if you would give publicity to it.

Yours faithfully, FRANK B. O'NEILL.
Theatre Royal, Hull, Oct. 31.

MR MULHOLLAND, in consequence of the great success made by Mr Levilly's company, including Mr Eric Thorne and Miss Stella Gastelle, with La Poupée at the King's Theatre, Hammersmith, three weeks ago, has engaged it for a return visit next week, with the new and charming opera, Amorelle. The version is the same as originally performed at Kennington last year.

BRITANNIA REOPENED AS THEATRE.

Mr Tom Barrasford, who is one of the apostles of the two-houses-a-night plan, beautified the great house in Hoxton last year, brought it up-to-date, installed the electric light, and in a superlative degree increased its comfort, elegance, and safety. With a new face upon the old house he made a drastic change in the form of entertainment. Five-act melodrama was disestablished, and the bi-nightly programme that he gave contained a short sketch—either dramatic or farcical—and varieties. To the staunch supporters of the late Mrs Lane and the stock company representations the changes were not quite palatable; and the theatre has now reverted to the old plan of drama, farce, and varieties which up to the commencement of the new century had been in vogue for thirty years. The Britannia Syndicate, with Mr Sydney Hyman as managing-director, which is responsible for the spirited revival of the old traditions of the "Brit.," as it is invariably called by the lovers of the play in the vast north-east district of London, has secured an excellent manager in Mr John M. East, and a capital all-round company. The choice of the opening piece fell upon the last autumn production of Drury-lane Theatre—the melo-farce, The Flood Tide, by Mr Cecil Raleigh. There are fine scenic effects and mechanical sensations in the piece which require a large and spacious stage, and to the thrilling episode of the bursting of the dam complete justice is done. The interior of the Brighton Metropole is also an excellent set, and the paddock at Kempton Park, with its jockeys and "sports," appeals to the horse-loving instincts of the Hoxton "Britons." The company is headed by Mr H. Hamilton Stewart, who is seen to considerable advantage as Captain Jack Champion, V. C., a character that is by no means easy to play. There is an artistic restraint in Mr Stewart's rendering that is very commendable, and this was especially the case in the scene in Jack's quarters. Mr Maitland Marler, an excellent low comedian, displays rare comic ability as George Wellington Clipp, who for the purposes of the plot poses as a millionaire. One never pities the woes of the low comedian, and Mr Marler's humour was irresistible in the scene where Clipp is seen recovering from his maltreatment at the hands of the angry race-course crowd. Mr Harry Griffen in the rôle of the serio-comic lunatic Macnaughton evinced considerable care in his treatment of an extraordinary character—the idiosyncracies of which were not quite grasped probably by the Britannia "gods." The return of Mr Charles A. East to the boards he graced during the latter days of the old stock company was a happy thought on the part of the management; and Mr East's conspicuous ability was shown in the capital part of Dick Champion, the repentant innkeeper. Mr East brought out the traits of the character admirably, and delineated the tenderness and fatherly affection of the elder Champion with no little skill. Mr Horace Pollock did not over accentuate the disagreeable peculiarities of the Earl of Sutton; Mr Graham Wentworth made a soldierly Colonel Sir Russell Corry; and Mr Fred Groves's Menotti Derago did not lack the essential qualities of malice and moral turpitude. Mr J. B. Howe, who is the oldest actor at present playing on the London boards, found that his long career at the Britannia had been remembered by his friends in front, and on his entrance as Podmore Blackman he had a greeting of which a prime minister might have been proud. Similar honours awaited Miss Julia Summers, whose years of service under the banner of Mrs Sara Lane were lovingly remembered by the boys and girls seated in the cheaper parts of the house on Monday night. Such loyalty to players is fortunately not rare on the English stage, but the kindly feeling expressed on Monday none the less did honour to the humble toilers of Hoxton, whose vivid remembrance of happy hours at the local playhouse may be regarded as a happy augury for its future. Miss Mildred Cottell, who has succeeded to the part of the Baroness Pitchioli, originally embodied at Drury-lane by Mrs Tree, has a commanding presence and a distinction of style that eminently fit her for so responsible a part. The caressing tones simulated by the Baroness when addressing her dupes were well contrasted with the real manner of the adventuress, and Miss Cottell's decision of style and aristocratic bearing made her success quite certain. Miss Rose Ralph was a handsome and completely satisfactory Marie Pitchioli, and the faith and love of Mabel Corry were depicted with much sweetness by Miss Dorothy Casey. Miss Marie Wright became a favourite with the audience on her first entrance as Polly Champion, and her spirit and vivacity in the part were warmly recognised. Miss Ethel Enever contributed a neat character sketch of Madame Muriel; and Miss Rose Harris was responsible for good work as Mrs Meredith. Mr Brun Ellis was a capable Sir Valentine; Mr A. Winslow submitted a life-like sketch of Billy Bunn; Mr Sydney Teversham's Mr Newman may be given a word of praise; and other parts were adequately presented. The scenery by Bruce Smith R. Caney, and R. C. M'Cleery was exceedingly fine, and the incidental music composed for the drama by Mr J. M. Glover was well played by the band. The varieties were contributed by Burley and Burley, comedy acrobats and patterers; Miss Clara Sefton, a speciality dancer of considerable attainments; and Mr Charles Clark, a dialect comedian of much resource. An entirely new series of animated pictures was also a much appreciated feature of the incidentals; and the bill concluded with the laughable farce Paddy Rooney's Blunders, with Mr Brian Daly in the part of Paddy. The whole evening was a great success, and bids fair to bring back the successful reputation the Britannia always had. At the conclusion of The Flood Tide Mr Jesse Sparrow made a speech from the stage and introduced the new management, at the same time remarking he himself was a man of the district, having known the house for the last thirty-five years, and he wished the new proprietors every success. The Rev. Cartmael Robinson, vicar of Hoxton, in the course of a few remarks from the stage-box, said he was more than pleased to be present that evening, and he felt sure the performance he had witnessed during the evening was just what was required in the district, and he thought people could learn as much and more by visiting a theatre than from the church. Among the many friends of Mr Hyman who looked in during the evening were:—The Rev. Cartmael Robinson, Messrs Jesse Sparrow, Fred Baugh, Tom Claxton, H. Cory Woodrow, Tom Tinsley, Charles Chapman, Tom Shaw, Taff Volta, Harry Wieland, Gallimore Fox, Jas. Fortune, Dave Cohen, Ernest De Vere, Chas. Read, Jack Munro, W. Henderson, Fred Thorne, C. Chaplin, Ted Volta, Francis Bull, W. Wollheim, Sam Hart, Tom Pacey, William Edelsten, Henri Cazman, E. Macdermott, Geo. Simmonds, J. Page, Burrows-Smith, Richard Cass, Percy Hart, Bobb Hutt, Carlton, Cayley Calvert, and Ernest Edelsten. On Monday next will be produced the moral drama It's Never too Late to Mend.

MR. TERRY HURST.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

Sir,—It is ever a great pleasure to me to read of the pronounced successes of those who in the past have been engaged by me for the testing qualities and arduous duties of stock business.

My attention has been kindly called to Mr Charles Carte's biography in The Era of the 29th inst., re the late Mr Terry Hurst.

I should like to say that I am still in existence, active, and, like, Barkis, "willing."

Yours faithfully, TERRY HURST.

MUSIC HALL GOSSIP.

The funeral of the late Mr Dan Leno will take place on Tuesday next. Mourners are to assemble at 11·30 a.m. at the residence, Springfield House, Atkins-road, Clapham-park, and an hour later the funeral cortège will proceed by way of Cavendish-road, through Cathles-road, and across Balham High-road, to the Church of the Ascension, Malwood-road, Balham, arriving there about one o'clock, when the first portion of the burial service (fully choral) will be conducted by the Rev. Mr Curtis, the Vicar, who will also read the committal sentences at the grave. The sad procession of funeral carriages will wend its way to Lambeth Cemetery, Tooting, where the interment is to take place about a quarter-past two.

The coffin, which is to be of solid oak, will bear the following inscription:—

GEORGE GALVIN
("Dan Leno"),
Who entered into rest October 31, 1904,
Aged 43.

The special brick vault which is being built as a last resting-place for the remains of the lamented comedian is on the first plot inside the main gates. It is a double vault, and the length of time required for its preparation accounts for the date of the funeral being protracted longer than would otherwise have been the case. Mr Theophilus Dunkley, the well-known undertaker, of 88, Westminster-bridge-road, is attending to the whole of the arrangements in connection with the funeral. Deputations from every society attached to the profession will be present at the graveside.

The chief mourners will be Mrs Leno, the widow; John and Ernest Leno, sons; Mrs Lubbock (Georgina Galvin Leno), eldest daughter; Mr C. Lubbock, son-in-law; Mr Johnny Danvers and Mrs Danvers, Mr and Mrs Rish, Mrs Dobson, and Mr and Mrs Reynolds.

Mrs Leno has received over 100 telegrams and upwards of fifty letters of sympathy from the leading ladies and gentlemen of the profession. Among the messages of condolence and regret were those of Sir Henry Irving and Miss Ellen Terry, Mr E. S. Willard, and many other prominent members of the theatrical profession.

The passing away of Dan Leno, who has died at the comparatively early age of forty-three, has saddened not only the world of entertainers but the world beyond the footlights. He was essentially the people's comedian. He understood—no one better—the struggle for life among the masses, and in his presentation of the comic side of domesticity there was always a sub-stratum of reality in his patter and business that, while it set everyone in a roar, gave the necessary touch of nature. But, apart from his great gifts as a comedian, he had qualities which endeared him to all with whom he came into contact. He never turned a deaf ear to the claims of charity, and his services were always being requisitioned for bazaars and theatrical and music hall matinées. Who does not remember his appearance as a fun maker at the annual Music Hall Sports and at several comic cricket matches at Kennington Oval on behalf of philanthropic societies? He showed always a warm interest in the Music Hall Benevolent Fund, and occupied the chair at the annual dinner in 1901. He was also an earnest advocate of the claims on the profession of the Music Hall Home.

Had Dan Leno not been an entertainer, he would probably have become an artist. He was intensely fond of drawing, and had considerable ability. Many of his pictures in oil and water-colour adorn the rooms of Springfield, his beautiful, old-world suburban residence at Clapham, and many of his friends were proud to hang specimens of his brush work on their own walls. His skill as a scene-painter enabled him to furnish the whole of the scenery of the children's pantomime produced at the old Grand Music Hall, Clapham, in which Miss Georgina Leno made her first appearance on any stage. The cast was made up entirely of children of members of the music hall profession.

He was always ready for a jest; and one of his North London friends, who met him once with Herbert Campbell and the Brothers Griffiths at a party given by Harry Randall at Highbury, relates how Dan got up an impromptu burlesque of the Mohawk Minstrels, with the lamented Herbert as interlocutor, himself as sentimental singer, and Joe and Fred Griffiths as corner men. How excessively funny the travesty was our readers may well imagine.

The removal within a few months of the two popular comedians who worked year by year together as the chief fun-makers in Old Drury's pantomimes leaves Mr Arthur Collins in an awkward position. We are given to understand that overtures are being made to the London Pavilion directorate to break the Christmas engagement of Phil Ray, so as to allow of him appearing in poor Leno's part. There has also been some talk of securing the services of Harry Tate, who has lately blossomed into a humourist of the first water; but he is booked some time ahead, and cannot in the circumstances come to Drury-lane until the year after next.

A few weeks ago Mr Leno met Mr Arthur Collins and Mr Hickory Wood to discuss his part in the pantomime of The White Cat. Dan was told that the chief point in his character would be a fondness for gardening. "Well, guv'nor," he answered, "you must let me have some geese with me on the stage if you want any cackle." A few years ago he perpetrated a joke at Old Drury by painting a property cow black—it was originally white. The stage-manager could not understand the change of colour, and inquiries were instituted as to who was responsible for the mischief. Dan gazed wistfully at the animal, and said "I expect she has been out in a thunderstorm. Lightning turns everything black."

The news of the death of Mr Dan Leno was received with profound regret in Belfast. A most unique tribute to the memory of the late comedian is a life-sized cartoon, drawn by Mr George Harrison, of the Palace Theatre orchestra, Belfast, and hung up in Mrs Stamford's (widow of the late J. G. Stamford), the well-known professional house. The drawing, a most faithful likeness, is carefully draped in mourning, and is being admired both by the profession and patrons of the house.

Owing to the funeral of Mr Dan Leno, president of the Music Hall Artistes' Railway Association, on Tuesday next, the offices will be closed on that day. At the 379th meeting of the Executive Committee held on Tuesday afternoon, with Mr Fred Neiman in the chair, the committee expressed its deep regret at the sad news, and immediately dispatched a telegram of sympathy to Mrs Leno. It was also decided to appoint a deputation from the Association to attend the funeral and to send a wreath.

"Dan Leno, poor Dan!" is the sorrowful exclamation that goes out from the lips of all whose happy lot it was to know him. Mr Frank Egerton, having for over thirty years rubbed shoulders with him as a brother artiste and friend, had on Wednesday evening last an opportunity of paying a tribute to his dead comrade. In the saloon of Collins's Hippodrome, Stoke-on-Trent, was unveiled a crape-bound portrait of "Dan" when in his merriest mood and his best form. The company present, headed by Mr Eugene Stratton, uncovered, and drank the silent toast, "Peace to his manes."

Mr Oswald Stoll, who is ever ready and foremost to assist any deserving charitable work, with his usual courtesy granted the entire free use of the Leicester Palace Theatre on Sunday evening for a concert on behalf of the funds of the Leicester Infirmary and Wycliffe Cottage Homes for the Blind. The beautiful building was packed with the leading townspeople, and Miss Marie Corelli, the well-known authoress, was present, and spoke a few words of appeal, referring to Mr Stoll's kindness in granting the use of the hall. Miss Ellen Terry, the eminent actress, was also present in a box with Mrs Vidal, the wife of the manager. The Mayor (Alderman Sawday), the Mayor-elect (Councillor Hilton), Sir Thomas Wright, and Alderman Wakerley (Parliamentary candidate for the Melton Division) were among the audience.

The Mayor-elect of Leicester moved a vote of thanks to Mr Oswald Stoll for his kindness in placing his handsome and well-managed theatre at their disposal, and Mr Leonard Vidal, in a few well-chosen words, thanked the audience on behalf of Mr Stoll. We should not omit to mention that the staff, headed by Mr Leonard Vidal (the courteous acting-manager), Mr Arthur Brogden (the assistant-manager), and Mr Bertram G. Isles (the stage-manager) gave their services, and did all in their power to make the concert the big success it undoubtedly was.

Dr. Walford Bodie has been recuperating during the week at his pretty home, Bohemia House, Macduff, N.B. He has been amusing himself with rod and line, catching the "Macduff haddie." This delicious fish, fried in butter, is a dish fit for Epicurus himself.

The Imperial Hippodrome and Circus, Belfast, will reopen for the season on Monday. Many novelties will be introduced by the proprietors, Messrs Carter and Bosco, who are also adopting the two houses a-night system. This experiment, which is certainly novel as far as circus business is concerned, will be watched with interest. Everything possible will be done to satisfy the patrons, and to repeat the "Hippodrome" success of last season. In this connection no one will be more energetic than the deservedly popular manager, Mr Irving Bosco, and his assistant, Mr George Dobler.

Mr Otto C. Culling, the popular manager of the Theatre Royal and Circus of Varieties, Bury, was elected on the 1st inst. to represent Redvales Ward on the Bury Town Council. He polled 783 votes, and displaced Mr H. Hargreaves, who had been a member of the council for the last three years.

Miss Marie Kendall, on Monday evening, at the second house at the Palace, Leicester, was about to reply to the demands of the audience for yet another song with "Just like the ivy, I'll cling to you," when she was seized with a sudden faintness, and could not proceed. Her friends will be pleased to know that she shortly afterwards recovered, and made her appearance on Tuesday evening amid the plaudits of an enthusiastic audience.

Miss Rachel Lowe has returned to London after a pleasant Continental tour, and resumes business on Monday next. Miss Lowe, who is a smart business woman as well as an original performer, while in Paris purchased the original costumes of the scena which made so great a success at the Folies-Marigny last summer, and will use them in an elaborate production of her song, "Any Rags," in her forthcoming pantomime engagement at the Kennington Theatre, where she will play Aladdin.

Miss Lilian Doreen, the charming ballad vocalist, is scoring at the London Pavilion with her delightful songs, "The Garden of Life" and "There's nothing new to say." Miss Doreen has made so great a success with the former song that the publishers, M. Witmark and Sons, have reserved it for her.

Miss Daisy Mayer, who has no equal as a singer of characteristic coon songs, has secured from M. Witmark and Sons a peculiar number with the significant title, "I won't be your lady friend no more."

As pantomime season is approaching, we note great activity among the music publishers, whose publications have so much to do with the success of these annuals. As usual, M. Witmark and Sons are early in the field, and from the compliments and kind words showered upon them by the leading managers and pantomime producers, have certainly this season excelled themselves in their selection of Christmas songs.

A number which has become an epidemic in America, entitled "Good-bye, little girl; good-bye," threatens to attain the same popularity on this side of the water. Mr Charles Warren, the London manager of this popular firm, in speaking of the season's prospects, says that at no time in the history of the "house of Witmark" have "we ever had so many really good numbers. In fact, the difficulty lies in the choosing. We have excellent numbers of every sort, and, indeed, several pantomime managers have selected all their numbers from our catalogue, as we can supply anything in the line of music from the rise to the fall of the curtain. Our rooms at the Witmark building are filled with artists, managers, and producers, and we can always find something suitable for each and every applicant."

In the Parisian production of The Country Girl at Olympia they are using the great American song success, "Good-bye, little girl, good-bye," "Tizan," and "Pretty Molly Shannon."

In a personal letter to Mr Charles Warren, of "Witmarks," Mr Max Dearly, the celebrated French comedian, thanks him for having called his attention to these numbers, as they have done not a little toward the success of the piece, which is playing nightly to crowded houses.

The Edison Bell Consolidated Phonograph Co., Limited, of 39, Charing-cross-road, have some excellent records of the late Dan Leno's songs. They include "The Waiter," "The Huntsman," "The Swimming Master," "Clever Mr Green," "Courting the Widow," "The Beefeater," "The Railway Guard," "The Recruiting Sergeant," "The Salvage Man," "The Shopwalker" and "Mrs Kelly." They have been sung into the Phonograph by Mr Harry Bluff, who has established a reputation by the distinct and loud quality of his productions. The small records can be had for 1s. each, and the series is entitled the Edison Bell Gold Moulded Records. The larger size, entitled Concert Records, are 5s. each.

The following sum has been collected for the Fred Chapman testimonial by Mr Wilkie Bard:—Miss Lil Hawthorne, £2 2s.; T. Barrasford, Esq., £2 12s. 6d.; George Peel, £2 2s.; Arthur Hart, £2 2s.; W. Westmoreland, £1 11s. 6d.; Ambrose Manning, £1 1s.; Frank Leo, 10s. 6d.; Harry Day, 10s. 6d.; Hartley Milburn, 10s. 6d.; Cavour, 10s. 6d.; and Wilkie Bard, £5 5s.; total, £18 18s. The matinée was a record success, the following artistes travelling from London to participate:—Little Tich, George Robey, Edmund Payne, Wilkie Bard, Queenie Leighton, Bessie Featherstone, Nellie Stratton, and Miss Lil Hawthorne.

Mr Douglas Crichton has resigned his position on The Era, and is, therefore, no longer connected with this paper

Mrs John Lawson became the mother of a fine boy on Oct. 24, the day, curiously enough, on which Mr Todd of London was produced at Bristol. The proud father received many congratulations from his friends in the west country, and also from his company.

Miss Lil Hawthorne commences an engagement at the Empire, Cardiff, on Nov. 7, with Swansea, Newport, Nottingham, and Leicester to follow. She then goes to Bristol to rehearse for pantomime at the Prince's Theatre. Miss Hawthorne plays the Prince, in Sleeping Beauty, a part specially written for her by J. Hickory Wood.

The absurd report that has recently been put into circulation regarding the alleged edict issued by the Lord Chamberlain ordering those theatres which have recently forsaken drama for variety to return to drama has arisen in this way. The Lord Chamberlain's licence expired last week, and the London County Council hold their sessions next week for granting licences to establishments south of the Thames. From a strictly legal point of view, therefore, the recently converted halls hold no licence whatever during the short interregnum, and they await the County Council singing and dancing licence. No change of entertainment, however, has been at all necessary, and a return to legitimate drama has not been thought of. As a matter of fact the Lord Chamberlain has no power to enforce such an order.

Miss Millie Hylton is under contract to Mr Oswald Stoll, who is booking artistes of the very highest reputation, and will appear at an early date at the new Coliseum, St. Martin's-lane, in a special scena, written for her by Mr John P. Harrington and George Le Brunn. It is entitled The Feast of Lanterns, and is a Japanese love idyll. Great taste and lavish expense will mark its production, and there will be specially painted scenery, novel effects, and numerous auxiliaries. Messrs Harrington and Le Brunn are also writing a number of other songs for Miss Hylton, and one of them, "Boccacio," has been accepted for production by Mr Stoll. This is a character that should be specially suited to such a clever burlesque artiste as Miss Hylton.

The introduction into the ballet L'Entente Cordiale of a dramatic scene representing the North Sea incident is causing great enthusiasm at the Alhambra. Other strong features of an excellent programme are Mdlle. Nadji, queen of equipoise; "Dida," the mystery; Miss Violet Elliott, the famous Australian singer; and wonderful series of Urban pictures of the British navy in action, with all the accompaniment of launching torpedoes and exploding mines.

The Surrey Vaudeville Theatre, Limited (82,345), has been registered with a capital of £11,000 in £1 shares. The object is to adopt an agreement with T. de la Pole Temple-West to take a lease of the Surrey Theatre, lately transformed, or about to be transformed, into a music hall, and to carry on there the business of music hall and theatre proprietors, variety entertainers, and caterers for entertainments and exhibitions.

The Surrey Theatre has been acquired by the Macnaghten Vaudeville circuit, and will be worked in connection with the other enterprises of the Macnaghten directorate in London—viz., Sadler's Wells, Bow Palace, and Foresters'. Mr Chris Wordsworth, the acting-manager at Bow Palace, will be installed in a similar position at the theatre over the bridge; but before he leaves the East-end to take up his new duties he will be accorded a farewell complimentary benefit. A number of Mr Wordsworth's friends have formed themselves into a committee, and Mr J. R. Warren has volunteered his services as hon. sec., Mr A. J. Fruin being the hon. treasurer. The benefit will take place on Thursday next.

The Charles Morton matinée which is to take place at the Palace on Tuesday, is arousing wide-spread interest. There is a great demand for seats, and by every post come further subscriptions from friends desirous of showing their sympathy. Sir Henry Irving, Miss Ellen Terry, Sir Squire Bancroft, Mr Leopold De Rothschild, Mr Alfred De Rothschild, Mr J. L. Toole, Mr Paul Rubens, Mr Henry Arthur Jones, Mr C. Dundas Slater, Mrs D'Oyly Carte, and Sir Charles Wyndham are among those who are interesting themselves in the project. On the programme the names of the following well-known artistes will appear:—Mr Rutland Barrington, Mr Arthur Bourchier, Mr Louis Bradfield, Mdlle. Adeline Genée, Mr Seymour Hicks, Miss Marie Lloyd, Miss Ruth Vincent, Miss Agnes Fraser, Mr Henry Lytton and the Cosy Corner Girls from the Lyric, Miss Evelyn Millard, Miss Ada Reeve (who will come specially from Cardiff), Mr Arthur Roberts, Miss Esmé Beringer, Mr Maurice Farkoa, Miss Topsy Sinden, Mr Lewis Waller, Mr Charles Warner, Miss Violet Vanbrugh, Mr Ernest Shand, Mr H. B. Tree, "Phroso," Mr Malcolm Scott, Mr Harry Tate, Mr Arthur Prince, Mr Mark Melford, Mr Robert Ganthony, Mr Harry Lauder, Chirgwin, and Mr R. H. Douglass; and an extract from the Alhambra Entente Cordiale ballet will be performed by the Alhambra corps.

The programme itself will be sold by charming actresses, including Miss Gertie Millar, Miss Madge Lessing, Miss Marie Studholme, Miss Sarah Brooke, Miss Lily Hanbury, and Miss Kate Cutler, and will contain original drawings by Mr Tom Browne, Mr Dudley Hardy, and Mr John Hassall. Within the covers of the programme will be found a mezzo-tint portrait of Mr Charles Morton suitable for framing

The monthly committee meeting of the Music Hall Sick Fund was held at the York Hotel on Wednesday afternoon. Mr Pat Carey (president) occupied the chair, and there were also present Messrs Frank Heath (hon. treasurer), W. Wainratta, Leslie Reed, Tom Carney, and W. Brisco. A vote of condolence with the widow and family of the late Mr Dan Leno was unanimously passed. The arrangements for a benefit performance on behalf of the Society were discussed, and some business of a private character having also been disposed of, the proceedings closed with a vote of thanks to the chairman.

Mr Arthur Roberts will appear on Monday at the Palace in the new sketch Brummagem Jem, the name part being a traveller in jewellery for the firm of Sparke and Flashel. He will have many opportunities of showing his versatility, and his return is eagerly looked for by his many admirers.

In one respect, at any rate, the music hall and the theatre are getting more and more into line. No less than three of the west-end houses have put on variety turns in the place of curtain raisers. At one Mr Frank Lincoln tells his amusing stories; at another Miss Fanny Wentworth obliges with a musical sketch; and a third employs those versatile entertainers, the Japs. This is hard on the writers of plays; but the neglect of the curtain raiser by managers, who mostly put it on with an indifferent cast, is largely responsible for the attitude of the public towards it.

Mr Harry Mountford, who with such conspicuous ability occupied the chair at the recent annual meeting of the Music Hall Artistes' Railway Rates Association at Gatti's (Road), desires to contradict the statement that he ever occupied a reporter's seat in the gallery of the House of Commons. He would have been proud to have done so, of course; but the allurements of Thespis claimed him at an early age. There is no reason, however, why Mr Mountford should not one day stand up for the music halls as a member of the House. He is an excellent speaker.

In addition to supplying Miss Marie Lloyd with several specially written numbers this week, Messrs John P. Harrington and George Le Brunn have also written an entirely new and original monologue of a novel character, entitled After the Match, for Mr Sidney Wood (Miss Marie Lloyd's youngest brother), which will be shortly produced at a leading West-end music hall.

Mr Chris Davis and Mr George Gray have settled their differences in respect of The Fighting Parson, a sketch which has had a most extraordinary success at the principal London and provincial halls. The Metropolitan, which recently produced the sketch, will appeal against the fine inflicted by Mr Curtiss Bennett on the ground of excessive damages.

Miss Ida Renf, having just returned from her successful American tour, will make her reappearance at the London Pavilion on Monday at ten o'clock, when by special request she will sing "The Rake's Progress" and "Selected MSS." by Mr Morris, the writer of "Rhoda and her Pagoda."

Mr George Dance will open the Richmond Theatre as a music hall on Boxing Day, when he will produce a pantomime entitled Cinderella, written by himself, and intended to play for an hour and a half. The other part of the programme will consist of variety turns. Mr Dance intends to have only one house a night, at any rate for a few months.

The Water Rats will follow their custom this year of producing a little novelty at their annual entertainment, which will be given on the afternoon of Monday, Nov. 21, at the London Pavilion, by kind permission of the directors. They will produce for one day only a play with the title The Wife with the Smile, the sub-title being Go Away, you Boys. The author is "A. W. Needle-ero," and the cast will include Mr George Gray as Ralph Ironclaw, the father and earth owner; Little Tich as Herbert Vane, the villain and heart-breaker; Mr Fred M'Naughton as the hero, Victor Thornbury; Mr Tom M'Naughton as Clothilde, the daughter of Ironclaw; Miss Alice Lloyd as Beatrice; Mr Tom Woottwell as Plantagenet, Mr Paul Martinetti as Advocaat, Mr Alfred Martinetti as Kummel, Mr Fred Karno as doctor, and Mr Harry Tate as the servant. There will also be a doll—a very mysterious figure indeed.

The name of Miss Arabella Allen, the pretty girl who made a hit at the London Pavilion some weeks back with impersonations of characters from Dickens, has already crossed the Channel. The smart little Paris paper, La Vie Populaire, published two of her portraits, as Nell's grandfather and as "herself," on its front page last week, praising her turn very highly and saying that no one would recognise her "enfantin et charmant visage dans les traits ridés du viellard." Miss Allen is now appearing at the suburban halls and preparing an elaborate study of Scrooge for the Christmas season. Her performance of the old skinflint of Dickens's immortal carol will be accompanied by a series of biograph pictures, showing his adventures with the Three Spirits.

Miss Allen has lately been working under difficulties. She had the misfortune to burn her arm a few weeks ago, and an accident that seemed trifling at the time has caused her a great deal of pain and anxiety. She has not allowed it, however, to interfere with her engagements, although the difficulties of her quick changes of dress and make-up have necessarily been increased. Miss Allen resembles Mr R. A. Roberts in her dislike of "trick" costumes. The popular protean actor was once persuaded to experiment with an ingeniously made "trick" waistcoat, but he found it a nervous strain, for, instead of thinking of his performance, he caught himself wondering all the time whether the waistcoat would act at the right minute. Miss Allen has had a similar experience, but, fortunately, she only made use of her "trick" suit for the part of Uriah Heep, at a strictly private rehearsal, for it had a way of falling to pieces at the most unexpected times.

Miss Reba Kaufman, the tiny toe dancer who remains at the Alhambra for another two months, made her appearance this week in a frock of golden gauze, with underskirts of rose pink. She is one of the American girls whom The Prince of Pilsen has left behind, having understudied Billy, the bell-boy, and danced at the Shaftesbury. Miss Kaufman was formerly a child actress, but when she grew up—in years, not in height—relinquished her old parts in favour of dancing. At first she played the banjo and danced in clogs on a marble slab 12in. square, but changed her style of work two years ago, adding point, in more ways than one, to her clever steps.

Mr Charles Pond has been fortunate enough to secure an engagement at the Alhambra, and to be the subject of special bills, as his name is not announced on the current programme. He is a new entertainer who, we think, should "go far," and in "Glimpses of Street Life" he has a subject with almost endless possibilities. His success has been immediate and deserved.

With very little preliminary make-up Mr Pond starts his interlude with a sketch of the workingman on strike. It will be remembered that our dear old friend Eccles, according to that gentle humourist, Tom Robertson, used to shout in the public-houses of Little Stangate:—"Are we working men slaves?" and Mr Pond's representative mechanic might very appropriately do the same. "Orace," as his hard-working wife calls him when she brings him a "cup o' tea in the mornin'," is given to "worriting" over the woes of his fellows, and he has laid down his tools seven years agone on a "mere matter o' principle." "Orace's" ambition is to become a member of Parliament. He would "tell the 'Ouse somethin'." He is an entirely different character to the bus-driver with his genial confidences and his sarcastic remarks to other jarvies; and the gentleman who handles the ribbons has no resemblance whatever to the coster with a grievance against the police for being "chivied," and against the public for not buying his wares. There is keen observation in each of these characters, and the accent of each has been surprisingly well caught. The niceties of expression, too, are well preserved, and equally well differentiated is each of the sketches, which are both artistic and highly humorous.

Mr Pond must have had some training in elocution and some little practice on the stage, and we learn from him that he has played clown in a pantomime in Scotland, and that legitimate drama has also enlisted him in its service. Eventually he fell in with Mr Arthur Roberts, who engaged him to play a part in the sketch, Where's the Count? at the Palace some weeks ago. He was formerly a member of the London Stock Exchange, and things were so bad that he took to the stage. We have a remembrance of a Mr Charles Pond some years since giving a recital of scenes from Shakespeare. That gentleman, we believe, was a pupil of Mr Hermann Vezin.

Datas, the man of memory, has arranged to start upon a tour of the world after he has completed his English contracts. The tour will include America, South Africa, and Australia, and at the conclusion of it—in two and a half years' time—he will, he informs us, retire from the stage altogether. We should imagine that his necessity of keeping himself posted in affairs of current interest, as well as in the history of the past, and memorising the dates of the events which have occurred, must be tremendous strain upon his mental resources.

Mr Herman Finck—who, by the way, celebrated his birthday on Friday—meets with a great many funny experiences in his capacity as musical director at the Palace Theatre. He often arranges, and occasionally composes, music for the different turns. Some time ago an American with a trained dog asked him to play some jingling airs that were quite unsuitable, and Mr Finck suggested an alteration. It was decided that he should write some special music, and when it was finished the American expressed himself as highly pleased. He did not, however, say a word about a fee, so Mr Finck, who had taken considerable trouble over the matter, broached the subject himself. "That's all right," said the American in a lofty manner, "What do you name the amount?" The composer named it, and the other man stared at him and exclaimed, "Why, I didn't give as much as that for the dog!"

On Thursday Mr H. E. Moss invited members of the leading newspapers to the London Hippodrome to witness a private performance of Herr Georg Lettl. Lettl gives all his feats of strength "free standing"—that is to say, he stands without support of any kind. His truly marvellous accomplishments consist of (1) lifting a huge anchor, weighing 850lb. with his hands alone, and with two men standing on it, making a weight of 1,170lb.; ditto with four men—1,500lb. (The world's record lift is 1,100lb.) He then encircles his body with a strap, and attaches the same to the back of a 14 h.p. or 16 h.p. Leonard motor car, stands still, whilst the car is set running at top speed—viz., 2,000 revolutions of engine, or thirty-five miles an hour. He not only pulls against it and retards its progress, but drags it backwards by pure strength across the area. The car then sets "full speed" reverse at 40 h.p. speed. Lettl pushes it forward across the arena, despite the engines going the opposite way. He then gets between two 8½ h.p. cars, which are turned back to back. They start off in opposite directions at full speed. By sheer finger strength he holds on to both from between, and they cannot move. Herr Lettl will appear at the Hippodrome publicly on Monday.

The directors of the Alhambra have kindly granted the use of that theatre for a morning performance in aid of the rebuilding fund of St. Bartholomew's Hospital. This will be given on Thursday, Dec. 8. Applications for tickets should be addressed to the Honorary Secretary of the Appeal Fund, St. Bartholomew's Hospital.

"Dan Leno" is announced to be the Rev. W. Carlile's topic on Sunday evening at St. Mary-at-Hill, Monument, and the collection will go to the Actors' Benevolent Fund.

Mr Tom Costello is reviving his well-known patriotic song "The Fighting Ships of England," which was a few years since dedicated by special permission to the Earl of Drogheda, president of the Navy League. The song, which has one of George Le Brunn's finest march melodies, has now been made "free" for both the halls and theatres. It is published by Messrs Francis and Day.

In the Court of Bankruptcy, on the 28th ult., a sitting was held for the public examination of Oscar Lotinga, described in the receiving order and known as Oscar Luck. The debtor stated that his engagements were at music halls and theatres in England and Scotland. He had been associated for twelve years with a troupe known as The Six Brothers Luck, his associates being his real brothers. This was the commencement of his business career. The liabilities are returned at £787, and assets nil, the deficiency account disclosing betting losses £476, and loss in connection with a cinematograph tour £500. In the absence of the debtor the examination was adjourned.

An important feature in the great military spectacle, Woman and War, to be produced by Harry Bruce and Ernest Ball at the Royal next Monday, is that, although there are only six speaking parts, the remainder of the company will be made up of leading actors for the non-speaking parts and the fight. The only supernumeraries that will be seen will be those lying dead on the battlefield.

Ahrensmayer has been drawing large crowds during the week to the Palace, Walthamstow and on Monday he is to be seen at the Empress, Brixton, and the Palace, Croydon. His enormous success in Glasgow recently has resulted in contracts for the entire Barrasford tour at a very large salary. A curious feature of his Glasgow engagement, by the way, was the extraordinary interest evinced by the Scotch medical fraternity. Not only were they nightly in evidence to witness his stage performance, but not a day passed without at least half a dozen doctors calling during the time that Ahrensmeyer devotes his powers free of charge to sufferers. That they were impressed by what they saw is positive by the fact that during the week no less than four patients were actually sent to Ahrensmeyer by Glasgow medical men.

On Thursday, in the Westminster County-court, Messrs Nathan and Somers, music hall agents, of Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, sought to recover £13 17s. 6d., as commission on engagements, from Miss Fanny Wentworth. In cross-examination, Mr Ben Nathan said the commission was to be paid on the original and next engagement, and was the form of contract adopted at the conference of owners and agents. Miss Wentworth would never have signed a contract she did not understand. She came to his office and called him a liar, and he ordered her out and told her never to enter it again. Defendant said she paid another agent for the engagements in question. There were high words at Mr Nathan's office, and when he turned her out and told her not to go there again she did not make any further call. His Honour adjourned the case to allow the defendant to counterclaim damages in connection with terminating the agreement.

Mr Edwin Brett and Miss Emmeline Orford the popular vaudeville artists, who are just now scoring very heavily on the Stoll tour in their new musical duologue, will be the Abanazar and Aladdin at Brixton Theatre this Christmas.

Miss Victoria Monks is singing a smart new song entitled "There's a Girl Inside." The words and music are from the pen of William Hargreaves, who is also the author and composer of Miss Monks's coon creation, "If you want to have a row wait till the sun shines," which has been acquired for publication by Charles Sheard and Co. The same firm has also in the press Mr George Robey's "Say no more about it," which is the joint work of William Hargreaves and C. G. Cotes.

Mr A. J. Towers, of the Victoria Hotel, Queen-street, Exeter, was appointed as agent in that town of the Music Hall Artistes' Railway Rates Association. The secretary reported that twenty-three new members had joined during the past week, making the total number enrolled since the commencement of 10,674.

The Lavers and Lake Combination appeared on Monday at the Foresters' in a new production entitled The Bloomsbury Burglars, a farcical extravaganza written by Mr Harry Boden. Mr Harry Lavers appeared as Guy Prescott, an artist, and Mr Lew Lake as one Nobbler, a mirth-provoking window-cleaner. Miss Queenie Lancaster took the part of Edith Arlington, and others who assisted in the representation were Messrs Ernest Webb, Will Roberts, and Bob Morris. The sketch was well received.

THE LONDON MUSIC HALLS.

THE EMPIRE.

That popular divertissement The Milliner Duchess had by no means exhausted its popularity when it was withdrawn from the bills of the Empire, and its revival there on Monday night for a few short weeks is a wise move on the part of the management. The entire production has been designed and supervised by Mr Wilhelm, and the action and dances have been arranged by Miss Katti Lanner. Surely no further testimonial could be desired concerning the excellence of the ballet, unless we add that the scenery is by Mr Joseph Harker and the music has been selected and arranged by Mr Leopold Wenzel. The cast has not a weak place. The commanding style and stately grace of Mdlle. Francesca Zanfretta admirably fit her for her position as the trading Duchesse; Miss M. Paston is duly business-like and severe as the Manageress; and Mdlle. Cora as Louisine is actively graceful. A genuinely clever piece of low comedy is furnished by Miss E. Clere as Tilda, an errand girl. Tilda is quite a Sans-Gêne of the gutter, and her enthusiasm in the execution of a jig or breakdown readily communicates itself to the audience. In a duo Miss Clere has for companion Mr Fred Farren, and it is a delightful number. The chief honours are, of course, secured by Mdlle. Adeline Genée, whose coquetry in a scène dansante is a clever display of the art of miming. In her danse gracieuse Mdlle. Genée "reviews," as it were, the modes of a century, and her pretty solo that comes later is an exquisite exhibition of dancing. Mr Hugh J. Ward, Mr Will Vokes, Mr Farren, and Mr Sundberg, with Misses Edith M'Farlane, F. Shaw, G. Thomas, and E. Tree, are responsible for an eccentric dance, which brings down the house. Mr Cuthbert Clark directs the fine orchestra, and secures an excellent performance of the music, which contains some fascinating numbers. Mr Clark's selection of nautical airs played just previously to the rising of the curtain on the ballet winds up, as it should do, with "Rule, Britannia," and there was a patriotic ring in the applause on the night of our visit which reflected the public excitement concerning "the political crisis." The variety business is largely composed of silent turns, but in Mr Charles T. Aldrich we have a "speaking" performer whose versatility seems to be endless. He opens his entertainment with some lightning-like changes of character, and impersonates in rapid succession Hazel Kirke, Bill Sykes, David Garrick, and Edmond Dantès (Count of Monte Cristo)—mere thumbnail sketches, it is true, but replete with character. He then changes to the rôle of tramp juggler, and plays with an old boot, a cigar stump, and a battered hat. He amuses himself with composing a rag picture of a comic-looking peacock, which in due course lays an egg; and keeps the audience surprised and amused by his clever fooling in a burlesque of a Chinese magician. Mr Aldrich is a very remarkable entertainer, and his show is absolutely unique. Morris Cronin, who made his first appearance in London some years ago on the other side of Leicester-square, has elaborated and improved his act, being now assisted by four other club-wielders—two of whom are particularly quaint. The stage set is very pretty, and there is some amusing screen business, which gives an air of mystery to the show. We can only speak of the club juggling as superlatively clever, and we know of no greater expert than Cronin, who is possessed of all the smartness and coolness attributed to the Yank. A musical performance of a very exceptional character is that of Georges Schindler, who is described as a mouth organ virtuoso. The instrument suggests ear-torturing cacophony; but Schindler, like another Orpheus, subdues it to correct harmonies and plays a portion of the overture to William Tell and the more popular selections of "Hiawatha" and a Sousa march. The tone is organ-like and mellow, and the runs have a flute-like quality that gives much delight to the music lover. Tom Browne appears as a waiter at an American bar, and while preparing a cocktail is pleased to whistle a piccolo solo. He also sits down to the piano and accompanies himself in some variations on "The Carnival of Venice," one of them being a specimen of double-note whistling, a decidedly rare accomplishment. Mr Browne's notes are particularly pleasant; happily they have none of the "ear-piercing fife" quality about them, which is something to be thankful for. Melot Hermann struggles manfully with our language in introducing his conjuring tricks, which are extremely neat and puzzling. He has an inexhaustible hat, from which he throws a number of button-holes, and his flag and canary tricks cause considerable astonishment. The Delbosqs in their vaulting speciality are clever, the double somersault over the heads of sixteen men winning loud applause. There is a deal of acceptable quaintness in the comedy act of O'Neil and Torp, the juggling of the one partner being supplemented by the head-spinning feats of the other. The tricks are eccentric and amusing generally, and the "business" introduced makes for laughter. From tall steel uprights topped by fixed horizontal bars, two of the Luken Brothers Quartet swing their partners to each other, and the pirouetting, double pirouetting, and double somersaulting form a series of feats that causes much excitement. On occasion, one of the somersaulters misses his "grasp," with the result that he falls safely on a specially prepared bed, and there is much cheering when the trick that has been missed is really accomplished. The Three Meers present a comedy wire act that has been admired and applauded in all parts of the world, and its originality and humour win for it a very hearty reception. The Yulian family of acrobats accomplish a number of smart Risley feats and some difficult shoulder tumbling; and the Two Brothers Hereleb show themselves to be genuinely comic acrobats. The Biograph winds up an excellent programme.

THE METROPOLE.

There may be a greater galaxy of variety theatre stars elsewhere, but for a real genuine two-and-a-half hours' enjoyment the entertainment Mr Lloyd Townrow has provided for the patrons of this cosy little theatre on Denmark-hill this week would be hard to beat. The most important features of the capital programme are a vaudeville entitled Betsy Mine; a one-act play, Her Good Name; and the drama For the Honour of the Regiment. Taking them in the order in which they were presented. Betsy Mine is a bright, merry, and brisk American farcical comedy, in which Horace Booley, an amateur stockbroker, dealing in mine shares without his wife's knowledge, and having a servant Betsy, soon finds himself at cross purpose with his wife. She intercepts a telegram which reads, "Get rid of Betsy at once," this having reference to the mine shares, and she comes to the conclusion that her husband has been carrying on a liaison with her maid. After many amusing passages which evoke roars of merriment, everything is explained, reconciliation follows, and the domestic barometer once more is "set calm." This trifle is amusingly written and capitally played throughout by Mr Charles Graydon as the speculating and much-abused Booley. Miss Kitty Willmore as his pretty and sorely-perplexed wife, Marie, is charmingly natural; while the smut-faced domestic Betsy, who "hasn't done nuffin'," is treated in a most artistic vein by Miss Nelly Lional. Her Good Name comes in the middle of the programme. The plots reveals how the successful chemist, John Vyce, of Darley-street, in his eagerness to discover more of the secrets of science, has left his young and charming wife to enter into the gaieties of a London season unattended. He, however, gets a rude awakening when he sees her and his dearest friend, the Hon. James Acrum, meet and enter a house together. He awaits his wife's homecoming in his study, where he has just discovered a subtle poison, which gradually renders a human being mad after the space of twelve months. On his wife's return with the Hon. James in close attendance he tells them of this deadly drug, and also hints that he has discovered their guilty secret. He sends his wife for coffee, and while she is away tells his friend that he knows all, and that in the coffee he has just drunk is the drug that will render him a maniac after many months of mental torture. He screens the senseless form of his false friend from his wife, whose guilty fears bring her back to ascertain her lover's fate. The now angered and outraged husband turns on his wife and openly accuses her at the same time he reproaches himself for his neglect of her. Acrum, recovering from the effects of morphia, which Vyce had substituted for the more deadly drug, overhears Adelaide avow her love for her husband and tell him that she had gone with Acrum that evening on purpose to tell him that their intimacy must cease. Vyce relents and forgives his wife, and on hearing a movement from behind the screen, rushes round in time to save Acrum from shooting himself. As the wronged husband Mr Monte Bayly is admirable. As Acrum Mr A. Fellows-Bassett plays with all the ease and bonhomie of a man of the world. Miss Diana Hope as the wife has much to do, and acts with force, grace, and delicacy. The last is the condensed drama For the Honour of the Regiment, which, as performed by Mr Frank Hardie's specially selected company, wins unreserved approbation. Mr C. Lidford Delph as the Colonel is martial and dignified; Mr George Grahame invests the character of the renegade Major with a cool, calculating villainy that is both effective and artistic; as Captain Dare, V.C., Mr William Felton gives a manly, earnest, and vigorous impersonation; as Private Jones Mr H. Day has little to do, but does that little well. Mr Frank Hardie as Lieutenant Bertie Clive is admirable, showing with artistic skill that under the thin veneer of a society dude there is still the unadulterated nature of a brave soldier and a gentleman. As Vera Dare Miss Irene Carlton combines with an admirable stage presence all the instincts of an artiste, and imbues her part with a womanly fervour and a firm confidence in "a woman's instinct against a man's reason." The variety turns include Mr Alix Lukos, who gains premier honours for a well-rendered recitation and song "Pictures in the fire," in which he revives many old memories of the stage, politics, and history. Miss Dolly St. Clair adopts the novel method of making her changes for a series of international dances in full sight of her audience, but would do better if she changed the character of her dance with her costume. Pat Doherty, an Irish comedian of the good old school, displays marvellous activity in a genuine Irish jig, and wins applause. Christo, an American illusionist, does some neat and clever card tricks, and his "apparent" volunteer assistant provokes much merriment. Massona, a skilful, smart, and amusing juggler, gains hearty applause for his amazing manipulation of a bundle of billiard cues. Miss Nancy St. John is successful in her very active cake-walk, which is as much admired as her chic and pretty costume. The efficient orchestra, under the direction of Mr W. Snell-Robinson, with the merry overture "All the Girls," put the audience in an excellent humour for the good things that follow.

DUCHESS, BALHAM.

A long lease in the affections of the Balham public has evidently been taken by the pretty Duchess since that charming theatre has been devoted to the purposes of variety under the able administration of Mr Walter Gibbons. The people of the thriving suburb have shown their preference for the lighter form of amusement, especially when presented in such attractive shape, and admirers of the entertainment are so numerous that both houses are liberally patronised each night, a felicitous result that owes much to the capable management of Mr Clifford King. Special attention has been paid in this week's programme to the element of fun, which enters largely into its composition, and is chiefly maintained by Mr Will Evans in his sketch Building a Chicken House. The inimitable droll has greatly elaborated the sketch since its first production, with the result that the erection of the poultry domicile proceeds to an accompaniment of mirth which never flags. The protracted struggles with timber, zinc roofing, and wire-netting have become more complicated, the encounters with an inquisitive neighbour wax still more furious, and the startling descent of the fowls from the skies forms a side-splitting conclusion. Shouts of laughter follow the progress of the skit, and admiring plaudits are reserved for the talented comedian at the end. A bright performance is furnished by Miss Gwennie Hasto, whose pretty voice lends itself agreeably to the sweet melody of "Don't fly away, Robin," the sentiment of which is well suited to popular feeling. In her acrobatic dance the fascinating comedienne presents a kaleidoscopic picture of dainty grace, the applause which it provokes bringing forth a number of neatly turned Catherine wheels. The Allisons put a deal of genuine comedy into their "sequels of courtship briefly told," and to their duet of "Isabella" is attached a skilful dance, which is performed to a quaint and tuneful melody. They are a clever couple, and no inconsiderable portion of their success lies in the mutual support which distinguishes all their work. Admiration is aroused by Mr Gilbert Girard, who gives an imitation of the Æolian harp, producing two distinct sounds at one and the same time by the use of his vocal cords alone. Mr Girard has quite a répertoire of imitations, from a dog-fight to the starting of a locomotive on a Canadian railway, all of which are embellished with remarkable facial play and a fund of comic patter, and encores innumerable are the outcome. The acrobatic feats of Eugene and Willie are smartly performed, none the less so because they are playing all the while on violins, keeping the tunes going in many inconceivable positions. Their show is enthusiastically commended, and delights as much by its cleverness and neatness as by its novelty. Mr Fred Herbert voices in reasoned rhymes and tuneful strains the claims of Englishmen against those of the Chinese in the Transvaal, and later employs his melodious baritone in the telling of what "John Bull said to Britannia," adding on Monday night a verse about the late Dan Leno, which was well rendered and admirably received. Two gentlemen of colour, named Pete and Juno, sing of "Angeline," but it is to their dancing that most attention is paid, one of the "coon" artistes doing a sand dance which is remarkable by reason of its intricate steps and the facility with which they are performed. A varied sketch is given by Lord, Murray, and Lord, whose ball-punching exploits are wont to excite astonishment; Ruffle's Imperial Bioscope gives interesting pictures bearing on the North Sea outrage, besides the comic film "Off for the Holidays;" and Mr Harry Morgan, comedian, also contributes to the bill. The orchestra, conducted by Mr T. A. Hannavy, keep admirable time and tune, the overture being a well-played excerpt from Suppé.

HARRY LAUDER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

Sir,—On page twenty-three of last Saturday's Era you have a paragraph referring to Harry Lauder giving a trial show at Gatti's (Road), in 1900, through the kind auspices of Mr Walter Munroe. May I point out that it was through the auspices of CHAT WITH MR. CLARENCE C. CORRI.

(BY OUR OWN COMMISSIONER.)

Surely one would predict something for the career of a man who at the age of six year becomes an actor in a stock company. And the prediction would have been justified in the case of Mr Clarence C. Corri, the musical director at the Hippodrome, for since the time when at the age of six he appeared at the Theatre Royal, Portsmouth, in the burlesque of Nell Gwynne, his has been a steady and well-deserved advancement. But he once made an earlier appearance than that, in public, too. It occurred when he was no more than three years of age. One night his mother took him to the Theatre Royal at Rochester. A young lady happened to be playing the "Guards' Waltz," regardless of time and tune. Suddenly, to his mother's astonishment and dismay, young Clarence jumped upon the seat and shouted, "No, no, that is all wrong; 'iss is the way 'oo should play it." This is, perhaps, not so surprising when one remembers that Mr Corri comes of a very musical family. His father was for many years a bandmaster in the Royal Navy, and used to relate stirring stories of his experiences during the Crimean War, when he was attached to the Olga frigate.

Greenwich was the birthplace of Mr Corri, and there his early days were spent in an atmosphere laden with sweet seductions of music. Reared in such circumstances, we need hardly wonder at his gaining admittance to a London orchestra when he was but fourteen years of age. He certainly commenced early enough, but it is to these early efforts at the Standard Theatre that Mr Corri rightly attributes his practical knowledge of orchestral work which has stood him in good stead as he advanced in his profession. His father insisted that the lad should begin at the bottom rung of the ladder, and to the wise judgment of the musical mariner we must ascribe no small degree of Mr Corri's subsequent success. His first engagement as a conductor came to him from Mr J. L. Shine, with whom he travelled during the run of Little Don Juan, Junior, a burlesque produced by the versatile Shine. Mr Corri's début as bandmaster took place at the Theatre Royal, Portsmouth, and since then he has toured all over the United Kingdom. It was in 1887 that his first really important commission came. Towards the end of that year he was engaged by Mr Michael Gunn to arrange and compose the music for the pantomime of Robinson Crusoe at the Gaiety Theatre, Dublin. In this line Mr Corri has since done some notable work, his dainty tuneful fancies being especially adapted for the light and airy branch of pantomime compositions. He had not long to wait for his next promotion, for Mr Mansell brought him to the Queen's Theatre, Manchester at the latter end of the 1888-89 season, and here Mr Corri wrote the music for one of the most successful "annuals" ever produced at that theatre. His success as composer on that occasion was the more noteworthy in face of the fact that he had only five days in which to prepare the whole of his music. He was at this theatre when the memorable conflagration took place, and he stayed at the Queen's during Mr Pitt-Hardacre's management of 1890-91, producing still another pantomime.

Mr Corri's next step was an ambitious one, for he left the Queen's Theatre to go out on tour with his cousin's (Mr Robert Blatchford's) charming comic opera, In Summer Days, the music for which was composed throughout by Mr Corri. Less than twelve months later, however, he was back again in Manchester, but this time under the banner of Mr Ramsay at the Theatre Royal, where he composed the music for the pantomime of Cinderella. So popular did his share of the work prove that on the second night of the run he was engaged for the following season. This latter engagement he fulfilled with as great a measure of success as attended his first term at the Manchester Royal. In 1893 Mr Corri was appointed musical director at the Winter Gardens, Blackpool, where he remained for five years during the summer seasons, going to the Theatre Royal, Manchester, in the winter. His first big work at the Winter Gardens was the ballet, America's World's Fair, in which he introduced some very enchanting numbers. Later on he produced at the same place his charming extravaganza entitled Jack, and The Carnival Electrique. Some of his most successful dances about this period were a couple of polkas, "A Ring of Bells" and "Poodle Polka," and a bewitching dance to which he gave the title of "Le Jeu de l'Eventail."

At the conclusion of Mr Oscar Barrett's pantomime of Aladdin, produced in Manchester in 1898, and for which the subject of this interview wrote the music and conducted the orchestra, Mr Corri opened at the Prince of Wales's Theatre, Birmingham, with The Dandy Fifth opera, for which he composed the music, and for which Mr George R. Sims wrote the lyrics. Mr Corri then travelled with the piece on its first tour of nine weeks, and at the conclusion of this provincial tour—which, by the way, re-started in the following August—he went to London to assist in the production of The Dandy Fifth at the Duke of York's Theatre. Mr Corri proudly claims to be the composer of an opera which has performed what is, perhaps, a record, the playing for fifty-two consecutive weeks without a break, not even excepting Good Friday and Christmas Day. When, subsequently Mr George R. Sims wrote the book of Miss Chiquita, Mr Corri attended to the musical numbers, and he performed a similar work in respect of Gay Piccadilly for the late Mr Dan Leno. All the three pieces were produced by Mr Frank Parker, now the stage-manager at the Hippodrome. After a short engagement with Mr Tom B. Davis, Mr Corri performed notable service for five Christmas seasons at the Coronet Theatre, Notting-hill, London, for which house he composed and assisted in the production of The Babes in the Wood, Dick Whittington, Aladdin, Forty Thieves, and Blue Beard. In addition to these, he wrote the music for four pantomimes which proved extremely successful at Camden Town, appearing for several seasons in the intervening months under Mr George Edwardes's management. Some eighteen months ago Mr Corri was engaged by Mr H. E. Moss as director of the orchestra at the London Hippodrome, and there he is still to be found. He composed the music for The Redskins, which was produced at the Hippodrome last year, as well as that for the pantomime extravaganza entitled The Golden Princess, presented last Christmas.

Mr Clarence C. Corri is one of the most genial men one could possibly meet. If we are to believe a pen-picture of his late father, written by "Nunquam" more than a decade ago, we should say that our present Mr Corri bears a striking resemblance to his male parent. In view of what we have already said about the latter it may be interesting to revert to the description referred to. It is as follows:—

"In the orchestra of a London theatre you may see any night a certain short stout gentleman with a double chin and an eyeglass, who sits in a faultless evening costume, flourishing a little wand and conducting a band through the mazes of the Bullfighters' chorus or the overture to Fra Diavolo. A nice, obliging, good-tempered family man he is, and one with whose bland, smiling face and round, comfortable figure you would never associate ideas of storm and travel and romance and war. Yet that same mild, well-bred musical conductor has once been young and adventurous, has been a mark for Muscovite bullets, and would now, if need were, conduct a storming party or a cutting-out expedition as calmly and as smilingly as he now conducts an orchestra."

The difference, however, between the careers of Mr Clarence Corri and his father is that the former has never engaged in warlike operations, and as far as we are aware has no intention in that direction. He satisfies himself with witnessing, when he is able to lay down his wand for a few seconds, the little mimic warfares which take place on the stage and in the arena of the Hippodrome. And if music be the pivot round which revolve his mental activities, it seems no less to agree with his physical make-up, for Mr Corri has the appearance of being a healthy and well-contented enough sort of individual.

THE ROYAL.

The two houses a-night and popular prices policy has proved remarkably successful at the Royal, and crowded audiences continue to be the rule. An item that has received bold advertisement this week is the special series of animated pictures depicting the disastrous results of the recent Russian outrage on the Dogger Bank. The first view shows the entrance to the dock, and then comes a panorama of the damaged trawlers, twenty-two in number. The terrible effects of some of the shells are plainly visible, more particularly a damaged engine-room showing the riven plates. A panorama of the Russian Fleet is received with hisses, while the pictures of the scenes at the funeral of the victims of the outrage arouse a feeling of genuine sympathetic interest. The hearses bearing the bodies of the two fishermen who were killed pass slowly along to the burial-ground, followed by the mourning coaches and a large crowd of fisherfolk and others. Portraits of some of the survivors are also shown, and when the well-known features of Lord Charles Beresford are revealed there is a hearty outburst of applause. An excellent engagement is that of Mr George Bastow, a comedian who is always successful in thoroughly amusing an audience. There is genuine humour in his ditty, "Don't forget your poor old father." The aged head of the family finds himself neglected and he gives vent to his dissatisfaction with the conduct of his son, who shows a preference for the society of a young lady. Laughter and tears are ever closely associated, and the neglected father might easily become a pathetic figure more calculated to excite pity than to evoke laughter. However, Mr Bastow wisely regards the old man's position from a strictly comic point of view, and the result is in every respect satisfactory. This popular comedian also does well with a song concerning "Woman's Rights," which are sometimes said to have a close connection with "man's wrongs." Mr Bastow has a quaint, effective style, and justly earns a liberal share of the applause. A warm welcome is accorded Miss Belle Davis and her picaninnies in a speciality act. The lady gives a coon song and the youngsters afford very active assistance. One of them displays his skill as a silver bâton manipulator, twirling it with remarkable ease and dexterity. Miss Alexandra Dagmar is a lady of fine presence, and she is also an excellent vocalist. She gives a French drinking song, followed by American and Tyrolean ditties. Appearing again, she sings another favourite, "The Coloured Band," with great effect. The Antos, in their clever musical act, win approval. One of them represents a big doll, which plays various musical instruments, and the whole performance is neatly and most effectively worked. Cline and Clark are successful asduettists, and a well-executed sand dance is rewarded by liberal applause. Miss Rosie Bartlett sings a couple of songs in acceptable style, and the Jackley Wonders, sensational tumblers, meet with their usual success. Major Newell prospers with his skating act, a feature of which is the step dance he gives with skates attached to his feet. Mr Harry Maynard, comedian, contributes to the programme; and mention should also be made of the excellent work done by the orchestra under the able direction of Mr Frederic D. Wood. The front of the house is carefully looked after by Mr H. Kelleman, the manager.

THE anniversary at the Middlesex will be celebrated on Thursday evening, Nov. 24, and the Brighton Alhambra anniversary on Thursday evening, Dec. 8 next. This early intimation of the dates of these two events is given by Mr J. L. Graydon in order, if possible, to prevent clashing.

HEARTIEST congratulations to Mr W. L. Richards, I.S.M., the popular chef d'orchestre of the Empire Theatre, Belfast, who is to be married on Wednesday next, 9th inst., to Miss M'Cann, sister of Mr James M'Cann, the esteemed acting-manager of the Theatre Royal, Belfast.

MISS VIOLET ELLIOTT, the Australian "lady bass," has altered her style of dress since she first appeared at the Alhambra. At first she looked like a dainty comedienne—she has now become a serious vocalist. Her dress this week was of white silk net, with a slightly pouched bodice, a folded satin belt, and a graceful design round the skirt of festoons and true-lovers' knots made of narrow white satin ribbon, the transparent sleeves being tight at the shoulders and falling in very big bells of lace a little above the elbows.

THE forty-second anniversary of the opening of Collins's, which is to be celebrated on Friday next, the 11th inst., reminds us that Sam Collins opened the Lansdowne Arms, as the original house was licensed, as a music hall on Sept. 20, 1862. He was there for scarcely three years, dying at the age of thirty-eight on May 25, 1865. The place was afterwards managed by his widow, the aunt of the late Mr Sprake, who very much enlarged the "little hall on the green" during his years of successful proprietorship.

MUIR AND BARTLETT, after a five months' tour of the provinces with their répertoire of comediettas, return to London for a short season on Monday, opening at the Cambridge, Middlesex, Grand, Clapham; Granville, Walham-green; Palace, Camberwell, &c.

THE ELLIOTTS AND SAVONAS.

WAKEFIELD CARRIED BY STORM.

THE WAKEFIELD HIPPODROME

Probably of all the topics of local interest the first appearance of the Elliott-Savona Troupe in Wakefield may be considered of paramount importance. An expensive engagement, running into three figures, this famous troupe, so eagerly "snapped up" by British and Continental variety entrepreneurs, has carried Wakefield people by storm with their magnificent musical performance given on various instruments, so embracing the elementary and the complexed types. The gorgeous and picturesque setting presented to the gaze of the audience when the curtain rises on the Seven Savonas ready for business transcends anything of a like nature on the variety stage we have ever seen. The beautiful colours of the flowers, the electrical illuminations in red, white, and blue, orange, and other hues, make a powerful appeal to the eye, and command admiration for these artistes, who can be artistic in other directions in addition to music. Whilst the vision is feasted with striking colour and design, the ear is enchained and enraptured with wonderful harmonies running the whole gamut of sound, the light and shade of music, from the simply melodious and delicately mellifluous to Wagnerian grandeur. A remarkable musical composition, in which a number of variety of instruments are introduced, accompanied by realistic representations of "the war of the elements" in the shape of thunder, lightning, hail, rain and wind, was given with a wonderful display of technical skill and finish. The executants are to be congratulated on their brilliant precision and harmonical accuracy. It is not surprising that at the two performances nightly the audience have been wildly enthusiastic, applauding and recalling the talented musicians with an exhausting demonstrativeness.

ASTOUNDING CHARACTER.

This week Wakefield has been startled, not by earthquakes, but by the marvellous performances that have been given each evening at the Hippodrome. On Wednesday and Thursday hundreds were unable to obtain admission. The performance is of a most astounding character. At the matinée on Saturday afternoon the Savonas will give the whole of their musical performance and arrangements have been made for extra seating accommodation. We would, however, advise everyone who have not witnessed this wonderful exhibition to be in time; in fact it will pay intending visitors to book their seats at the early doors, and we are sure that all who see it will not begrudge the small fee they pay for admission.—Echo, Friday, Oct. 28.

AN ADDRESS.

To have been recited at the farewell benefit performance to the late Mr Charles Morton. By a pathetic coincidence the MS. reached the directors on the morning of his death:—

If, as 'tis said, the oldest friend's the best,
To you—to-day a loved and honoured guest—
Belongs the happy privilege to say:
"Best friend am I of all who love the play—
At least, the play of jest and song and dance,
In varied turn—not problem and romance."
And so say we who know the years you've spent
In toilful zeal, with resolute intent
To raise the "halls" from obloquy and shame
To homes of art and palaces of fame.
Success has crowned your long, laborious days
And wreathed you with the best of Fortune's bays;
And so, to-day, dear Father of the Halls,
We've planned a pageant in your Palace walls,
To prove the pride and pleasure that we feel
In your untiring and triumphant zeal.
And most we love to think upon the care
You oftimes gave to build a helpful stair,
By which the young aspirant safely climbed
To giddy heights, with kindly counsel primed.
How many a "star" that shines with lustrous flame
Besides you in the firmament of Fame,
Remembring still the one-time timid knock
That craved admission to your envied flock,
Must bless the aid, auspiciously invoked,
Which bred a Thespian—booted, armed, and cloaked!
And in each breast this pleasant knowledge lies—
Fame was the target, but your smile the prize!
And now we wish—the players, public, Press—
To mark the era of your bright success.
No hour is this for parting and farewell,
But rather one new friendships to foretell.
Long from your efforts we rich pleasure drew,
To-day, old friend, we're bent on pleasing you.
To this the brightest "stars" have lent their aid,
With Queen of Dance, and Music, "heavenly maid."
These shed their light and sweetness on your way,
And do you homage this eventful day.
And here's the wish that all our hearts express:
Long may you live in Fortune's fond caress,
While joy and ease, with health and calm content,
Attend your conscience of a life well spent.

HERBERT CAMPBELL MEMORIAL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

Sir,—A memorial to the late Mr Herbert Campbell in the shape of a bust, either in marble or bronze, is to be obtained, and placed, if possible, in the vestibule of the Theatre Royal, Drury-lane, the scene of so many of his triumphs. Mr Harry Randall has kindly consented to act as president and Mr Edward Ledger, of The Era, as treasurer to the fund.

It is the intention of the committee to engage an artist of repute to execute this work to the memory of the above-mentioned generous and genial comedian. The committee will esteem it a great favour if his old friends and admirers will assist in making this memorial a success. All subscriptions will be duly acknowledged in The Era.

THE Terriers' social concert arranged to take place on Sunday at the headquarters, the Dover Castle Hotel, Westminster-bridge-road, has been abandoned in consequence of the death of Mr Dan Leno.

A FIRE broke out at Mr Tom Fancourt's residence, St. John's-hill-grove, Wandsworth, on Friday, the 28th ult., through a gas explosion. Part of his drawing-room was destroyed.

THE Marquis of Lansdowne was present at the Alhambra on the 28th ult. and saw the ballet, The Entente Cordiale,

MR JACK BROWNSON has written a funny duologue entitled Elizabeth and the Baby, which will be produced in a few days by that clever and popular comedy couple, Mayon and Marle (late Elvo and Evelyn).

THAT clever pair of entertainers known as Fielding and Hull are due home to-day (Saturday) per ss. Saxon from the Cape. Their novel act, An Officer's Flirtation, by George Arthurs and Alan Macey, made a great hit at both the Johannesburg Empire and the Cape Town Tivoli. They open in town immediately.

OWING to the success of "Tracking the Track" Miss Minni Letta is busy with Nos. 2 and 3 companies, which are coming forward for Christmas, one company of sporting girls leaving shortly for the Continent.

THE PATHE CINEMATOGRAPH:

A CHAT WITH MR. RICHARD COLLIER.

The work of producing cinématograph films has now become quite a fine art. As to its popularity there can be no doubt, and some of the animated pictures which have been presented to the public appear to be little less than the productions of genius. Many a time, as we have watched scene after scene depicting real life, has the wondering, whispered question gone forth from more than one spectator, "However have they managed to get such a picture?" We certainly do possess some knowledge of how these remarkable effects are obtained, but it would hardly be fair to disclose to the lay mind what goes on behind the scenes of cinématography. And in remaining silent we will plead the further excuse that the mystery of the thing creates an added interest from the point of view of the ordinary looker-on.

When a history of the progress of animated photography comes to be written, no inconsiderable portion of the volume would have to be devoted to the remarkable achievements of the Pathé Cinematograph Company. The great enterprise shown by this firm has been abundantly and deservedly fruitful, and their magnificent photographic creations bear ready testimony to this. The business house of Pathé in London was started less than a couple of years ago, and the firm have made remarkable strides since then. It should be mentioned that the Pathé Cinematograph Company (London), Limited, to give the full title, is quite a distinct concern from the French house of that name, although the English establishment deal only in the films which bear their name. Their great forte, as Mr Richard Collier, the able and energetic manager, puts it, is the producing of big scenes. A couple of these which proved exceedingly popular last year were "The Life of Napoleon" and "Marie Antoinette," both of which were presented at the Palace Theatre, Shaftesbury-avenue. Other notable series have been "Christopher Columbus," "The Butterfly's Metamorphosis," "Alcohol and its Victims," "Indians and Cowboys," "Annie's Love Story," "Excursions through Italy," "The Boar Hunt," and "The Bull-fight." Among their numerous fine Christmas series may be mentioned the pantomimes in picture of Ali Baba, the Forty Thieves, The Sleeping Beauty, and Puss in Boots. Their latest success is entitled "A Tragedy in the Air." In this a balloon, containing a couple of men, is seen preparing to leave the ground, its gradual upward flight, until the "basket" is no longer visible, being admirably depicted on the screen. We next get a view of the balloon and its occupants, now high up in the sky. The two men are looking through telescopes in all directions, and we are shown precisely what they see—the tops of the houses, the church spires, the ships in harbour and on the high seas, and the water dashing against the rocks. Suddenly the sky is overcast, and a storm breaks forth in all its fury. The forks of lightning dart out from the mist here and there in all the awe-inspiring splendour of their startling illumination, and the rain comes pelting down in torrents. One streak of lightning appears to pass through the balloon, which is the next instant enveloped in flames, the gas-filled bag bursts, and the car rapidly descends into the sea, the occupants being finally rescued by boatmen. Altogether it is a most realistic representation, and we can well imagine that no small efforts were exerted in order to secure the various individual portions incidental to the whole.

The longest film yet brought by the Pathé Company is one stretching out to over 2,000ft. It is a series comprising thirty-two pictures from the Passion Play, similar to that produced at Oberammergau, the entire staging being based on strictly authentic sources. This set is claimed to be one of the most beautiful that has ever been placed on the market, the Crucifixion scene being particularly striking. "The Prodigal Son" is the title of another religious subject for which the Pathé Company is responsible, other religious scenes being those connected with the Bible history of Samson and Delilah and "Joseph Sold by his Brethren." Emphatic and impressive in the lesson it teaches is the series which goes by the name of "Alcohol and its Victims," to which we have already referred. The story of the drunken husband who ruins himself, morally and physically, and at the same time ruins his home, his detention in a padded room of a lunatic asylum, and his death after delirium tremens, is pathetically told in a way that admits of no misunderstanding.

Two new sets which are certain to be of great interest will shortly be put upon the market by the Pathé company. They deal with a trip from Christiania to Cape North and with "the fountains playing at Versailles." The latter will be shown in colours, and Mr Collier informs us that it is exceedingly pretty. Among their other fresh pictures which have quite recently been seen by music hall and other audiences are films illustrating sardine fishing off the coast of France, the magnificent waterfalls in Sweden, and incidents in the Russo-Japanese War. The firm are at present busy on some further pictures which they will produce between now and Christmas, and which, we are assured, will far surpass in scenic effect and quality anything they have yet placed before the public.

We were favoured the other day by a "private view" of Pathé films in the splendidly appointed projecting room which the company has built in their big establishment at 14, 16, and 18, Lamb's Conduit street, Holborn, W.C. The scenes put forward for our special edification were of surpassing excellence, both as to the arrangement of the subjects and the steadiness and clearness of the pictures. The Pathé Cinématograph Co. are to be highly commended for their really superb productions.

DAN LENO'S BUMPS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

Sir,—When I was passing the Tivoli one Saturday evening late in 1897 the late Mr Vernon Dowsett asked me if I would call in after the hall had closed and examine the head of Dan Leno. I did so, in the presence of a few noted people. Dan had declared that he never would have his head examined. But as soon as I was upon the stage I started upon him at once before he was aware, with the result that he was very much surprised. I found that one of the smallest faculties was the organ of hope, so that he was, in fact, of a very melancholy nature; and, although he had the great gift of making many laugh, yet this arose from mirth, being very large, combined with a fine intellect. On this occasion I told him that the nervous system had been greatly overtaxed. His brain was large, but the great defect in the constitution was a very faulty state of the digestive organs, and this was really the first thing that caused his brain trouble. With regard to his character generally if he had not been upon the stage he would have made a splendid artist. As a sculptor he would have been a great success. The religious group of organs did not predominate; his sympathies at times ran away with his judgment. The great width from ear to ear endowed him with very great vitality. The well filled-out forehead in the centre gave him that great versatility of intellect that he possessed. His energy and spirit were seen by the large development just above the ears. The great fulness just above the forehead was the organ of imitation in an immense state of development, and endowed him with the great talent for mimicry that he possessed.

Yours faithfully, Professor W. CROSS.

THE many friends of Miss Minnie Palmerston will be sorry to hear of her death, which took place at Belfast on Nov. 1, after a short illness, from typhoid fever. She was interred in the City Cemetery, Belfast on Thursday.

DEATH OF DAN LENO.

"A fellow of infinite jest, of most excellent fancy!" Such, indeed, was the late Dan Leno, whose unexpected death on Monday morning will be deeply mourned not only by his brothers and sisters of the music hall profession but by thousands of laughter-lovers who have enjoyed to the full his simple expedients for creating wholesome fun, his timely quip, and his rare fund of eccentricity. The immediate cause of death was heart failure, although for eighteen months the famous jester had suffered from a form of mental disease known to medical experts as general paralysis of the brain. Since his return to the London Pavilion it was painfully apparent to his friends that he was no longer the Leno of former years. Mental concentration was impossible, and it is certain now that the malady, of which the course had been arrested in a most remarkable way, was again making itself felt. On Thursday, the 20th ult., Mr Leno made his last appearance in public at the London Pavilion, and danced with the vigour that invariably characterised his efforts in the days when he claimed champion honours as a step-dancer. He was taken home to his residence, Springfield, Clapham-park, and nursed night and day. He had been confined to his bed for about ten days in charge of two attendants, but his death was not anticipated. He lapsed into semi-unconsciousness on Sunday, and was unable to recognise his relatives. His attendant on Monday morning noticed a serious change, and at once summoned Dr. Vallery and the members of the family. Surrounded by them, he passed away in his wife's arms. Poor Dan Leno! which one heard on every side when it was known more than a twelvemonth ago that he was suffering from dementia, will be repeated now, for there can be few comedians and few men living who made more unknown friends on the other side of the footlights. He was greatly liked by members of the theatrical profession, and gave his services without stint at benefit matinées. We remember him at the now defunct Globe Theatre at the testimonial performance given in aid of the late Stewart Dawson, and he took part in a performance of The Critic at the farewell of Mrs Billington at the Lyceum, his companions in the representation including Mr Arthur Bourchier and Miss Violet Vanbrugh. Alas! the curtain is rung down; the cap and bells have been laid aside; and the laugh of the King's Jester, as he loved to call himself, is stilled for ever!

Mr Leno, whose real name was George Galvin, was born in February, 1861, in a humble dwelling in Eve-court, in the district of Somerstown, that was swept away in the early seventies to make room for the Midland Terminus at St. Pancras. His parents were known in the profession as Mr and Mrs Johnny Wilde, and he made his first appearance at the age of three as an acrobat at the Cosmotheca, in Bell-street, Edgware-road. Later in his juvenile career he met with an accident which compelled him to relinquish tumbling for dancing, and his brother having taught him a few steps, they travelled as the Brothers Leno, the name of his step-father.

The Brothers Leno made their first appearance at a North London music hall, on a stage which was surrounded with mirrors. In 1869 his parents went to Glasgow to fulfill a fortnight's engagement. With them he toured all over the three kingdoms, as well as part of Germany, as the Leno family, and he first made a separate reputation for himself at Dublin. One week he was singing at the smallest hall in the city at 15s. a week, and the next he was engaged at the Exhibition Palace for £1 15s. a night, which was a very pleasant change. He became well known in Ireland, and at Belfast he had the honour to receive a high compliment from Charles Dickens, who saw him at the time he was lecturing there.

All this time he kept on practising dancing, at which he became a great adept, and in 1880 his father saw an advertisement in The Era announcing a clog-dancing competition at the Princess Palace, Leeds, for the championship of the world, and on his advice Dan entered, but had no expectation of winning. However, after dancing against seventeen of the finest performers in the profession, the judges awarded him the championship belt, and he held the title in three more competitions.

Soon after his first appearance in London in the early eighties at the Middlesex and Foresters', Dan Leno was secured for the Oxford by Mr J. H. Jennings, and we well remember his success in the song "Milk for the Twins" on that occasion, but he did not omit to wear his champion belt and rattle the clogs in an exhibition clog dance that has never been equalled. He sang the song in the costume of an old woman, and Mr George Conquest, who happened to see him, engaged him and his wife (Miss Lydia Reynolds), for the pantomime at the Surrey in 1886-87, when he appeared as Jack's mother in Jack and the Beanstalk. His success was immediate, and he was re-engaged for Sinbad in the following year. Then commenced (1888-89) a long series of triumphs at Drury-lane. Sir Augustus Harris saw the great little comedian, and immediately secured him for the part of the Baroness, in The Babes in the Wood. Since then he played in Jack and the Beanstalk, 1889; Beauty and the Beast, 1890; Humpty Dumpty, 1891; Little Bo Peep, 1892; Robinson Crusoe, 1893; Whittington and his Cat, 1894; Cinderella, 1895; Aladdin, 1896; Babes in the Wood, 1897; Forty Thieves, 1898; Jack and the Beanstalk, 1899; Sleeping Beauty and the Beast, 1900; Blue Beard, 1901; Mother Goose, 1902; and Humpty Dumpty, 1903. His Mother Goose was quite different from his Widow Twankey. The cast of Beauty and the Beast in 1890 included the beautiful Miss Belle Bilton, now the Countess of Clancarty. He appeared also at the Strand in the late eighties, in a burlesque called Atalanta, and in the first year of the present century he toured with a piece called Orlando Dando. Later he produced Mr Wix of Wickham at the Borough Theatre, Stratford, and was supported by Miss Georgina Leno, his eldest daughter, who retired from the stage on her marriage last year. Hard though his theatre work was, he preferred it to the routine of the halls, with its rapid making-up and its hurry and drive. He liked the quiet of the Christmas pantomime.

One of his earliest successes on the music halls was "Young men taken in and done for," and as an instance of his generosity of heart it may now be stated that when he heard of the distress and illness of the composer of this number he provided the poor fellow with funds that procured for him the necessary luxuries and the best of nursing until he died. "The Shopwalker" was the first of an extraordinarily successful series of impersonations, followed by the proprietor of "The Storer," with a wonderful lecture on a fowl and some conscientious remarks on eggs. "The Waiter," "The Doctor" were scarcely less successful," and an impersonation that was probably suggested by "The Shopwalker" was that of the bootshop proprietor. The professor of anatomy, with an illustrative lecture on the human form, was entirely different in treatment to the ludicrously comic "Beefeater of the Tower," the Huntsman, the Bathing Attendant, or the Railway Porter, to each of which characters—exaggerated as they necessarily were—the deceased comedian gave an individuality that could have been only the result of genius. Then there was "Mrs Kelly." What a really delightful creature she was, to be sure!

In our Era Annual of last year Mr Leno spoke of her and his father in an amusing anecdote which runs as follows:—"You all know Mrs Kelly—of course! you must know Mrs Kelly. Well, at the time I am speaking of—considerably over twenty years ago—I fancy my landlady's name was Mrs Kelly. I was engaged to play Jack, in the pantomime of Jack the Giant-Killer. The theatre was the old Rotunda, Liverpool, and the manager Mr Dennis Grannell. Those were the days when the harlequinade was made a feature of, and not as it is now, queenly looking daughters the unfortunate pantomimists had adroitly landed. Things were said in various quarters. I heard them. I will not repeat them, but—I remember!"

He had not only a rich fund of humour in his own quaint face and person, he had that far rarer gift—the intelligence to make use of it. In all but the root idea the long list of characters he performed in pantomime or music hall were the children of his own imagination and his own minute care for detail. His brains were as much to thank as his face or his voice for the roars of laughter he could raise for fifteen minutes without a break from a packed house in Drury-lane Theatre. He took an intense pride in the rapid rise of the music hall profession, and at a gathering of the Music Hall Artistes' Railway Rates Association at the Horns, Kennington, he spoke with intense gratitude of the King's kindly recognition of the once-despised music hall artiste.

The proudest moment of his life, indeed, was when he appeared before his Majesty at Sandringham on Nov. 26, 1901, which he afterwards described as follows:—"On the Saturday as I was sitting down to dinner with my wife at the Trocadero the news came to me. 'It is the King's wish,' I was told. 'I can't,' I replied, 'I'm performing at Brixton.' 'It is the King's command,' I was told, and then it broke upon me, and I said 'Oh!' At Sandringham I felt very proud. I had a free hand. I never had a better audience. The King rocked with laughter. It was the greatest day of my life, and my happiness was complete when the King shook me by the hand and the Queen took my hand in hers. Everyone was kind, while the place was so homelike. Since my return the King has sent me a tie-pin, and down Clapham way everyone asks me, 'Show us the pin, Dan.'" It was the first Royal performance after the Coronation, and when Dan arrived at Sandringham he was exceedingly nervous, and his managers were afraid that this might detract from his success. When he got on the stage, however, he quite recovered his composure and did splendidly. He scored an emphatic success, and his Majesty was delighted with him. An amusing incident occurred after his "turn" before the distinguished company. The King asked that Mr Leno should be presented, and Dan with all haste divested himself of his make-up. It was then found that his servant had omitted to put his dress trousers in the bag. Everything was there except the trousers. At last, in despair, Mr Ashton borrowed a pair of trousers from one of the King's servants, and Mr Leno appeared and received the Royal congratulations.

In private life Mr Leno was something of an amateur farmer, and was very proud of his crop of hay, grown in a field next to his house, for which he obtained £15. He was a man of the most lavish generosity, founded on personal sympathy with those in need. His income was enormous and his popularity even greater. He was chairman of the Music Hall Benevolent Fund Dinner in 1901, the vice-chairman on that occasion being his staunch friend, Herbert Campbell, who was always proud of Dan's success.

THE LATE MR. DAN LENO.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

Sir,—Humorist and gentleman may well be written without fear above the name of the late Dan Leno. He had to plough in rough fields long before gathering in the harvest. I remember once his saying, after a visit to the long-forgotten Malakoff in Liverpool, "Mother and father saw my start here, and watched me tight my way to Drury-lane. Now I have seen two lives, lived in two worlds, and made two names."

The thoughts of the many will go out to Dan, and live in memory land where dwells the little gentleman who contributed so much towards the gaiety of nations.

Yours faithfully, HERBERT SHELLEY.

LENO REX.

The lord of comics—the arch-prince of jest—
Has left the busy stage for evermore,
And all his witty sayings, and the roar
On roar of mirthful laughter that his quest
For fun created, are hushed—He's at rest.
We, who oft saw him chase the goddess Mirth
And snatch her choicest treasures, knew his worth,
And deemed him, of our humourists, the best.
Ring down the curtain! Let the lights burn dim!
Make some sweet chord of music, soft and low,
To mingle with our tenderness for him,
Our monarch of burlesque, who lived to show
How strangely humour to our hearts is wed.
Ring down the curtain! Leno rex is dead!—F. T.

DAN LENO, DANCER.

AN IMPRESSION.

A correspondent sends an interesting account of his first impression of Dan Leno on the music hall stage twenty years ago. He says:—"I was in Sheffield at the time—to be precise, on September 15, 1884, just over twenty years ago. Anxious to find a suitable place of amusement at which to spend the evening, I glanced down the columns of a Sheffield paper of that date, and my eye fell upon the following announcement—

"Having decided to indulge in the luxury of a 'cushioned' seat, I paid my shilling at the doof or pushed through to empty benches in about ten minutes, or, worse still, neglected entirely. Paddy Phillips, the first man that ever sang Irish comic songs with trousers on (reason—because he had no knee-breeches), was the pantaloon, and my dad was the clown. Funds in those day were not exactly plentiful, and if any of us wanted a drink we had to 'sub' it—that is to say, owe for it—so that if any refreshment was placed in our way without 'parting' for it, it had a powerful fascination. There were two large stage boxes at the Rotunda, and these boxes were so ill lit that if the occupants were seated well back it was absolutely impossible for the performers to tell whether they were empty or not. Dad, who, as I said, was clowning, was in the habit of falling into one of these boxes, which act was thought to be highly original and diverting. One night he disappeared for several minutes, much to the chagrin and annoyance of the pantaloon. Each night Dad disappeared in the same way, and each night remained for a longer period in the box, and each night he came out of the box wiping his mouth and wearing a particularly placid and self-satisfied smile. Paddy Phillips had his suspicions aroused, and one Saturday night, when the clown did his customary fall into the box, the pantaloon fell in after him, and they both remained there for heaven knows how long, leaving the harlequinade to the columbine and harlequin, who twiddled his wand and tripped across the stage until the gallery rebuked him in tones more forcible than encouraging. This brought things to a crisis. Inquiries were instituted, and it was discovered that the box was occupied nightly by some "Johnnies"—habitués of the theatre at pantomime time, who had received the clown with open arms and treated him to generous libations of champagne and other 'heady' drinks. The governor threatened both clown and pantaloon with a real 'Irishman's rise,' and for a time the culprits lay low and attended to their business. But one Saturday night they were consumed with a raging desire to once more sample the flowing bowl, so they both did a graceful somersault into the favourite box, each landing on to a different lap. Horror! The box was not occupied by the accustomed Johnnies, but by an austere and most dignified local magnate, on the laps of whose two queenly looking daughters the unfortunate pantomimists had adroitly landed. Things were said in various quarters. I heard them. I will not repeat them, but—I remember!"

"Having decided to indulge in the luxury of a 'cushioned' seat, I paid my shilling at the doof or Leno's Grand Varieties (a transformed wooden circus) on the site of the present Lyceum Theatre. In the centre of the hall burnt a bright coke fire in a sort of square iron basket arrrangement standing on four legs. Towards the end of the performance came the turn of the star of the evening—young Dan Leno, son of the proprietor of the theatre. His contribution consisted of a clog-dancing performance which fairly brought down the house and he was encored again and again. This was the first time I saw Dan as an entertainer—clog-dancing before an 'unwashed' audience in the dingy circus hall. What a change in his fortunes had taken place since then. Never for a moment did I think to see him in later years at the very top of his profession—the wittiest, the smartest, the most versatile comedian this, or any other, century has produced."

THE ROYAL ALBERT.

Satisfaction always rests on the faces of the patrons of Mr Charles Reif's hall, who find within its cosy walls the entertainment suited to their tastes, and well calculated to relieve the stress of a day of a toil such as is spent by the dock labourers and seamen who form the bulk of the residents of Canning-town. Local tradesmen also support Mr Reif's hall in full force, and are as equally appreciative of the excellent programme which he always provides. The melodramatic playlet is never absent from the bill, and during the present week, midway in the evening, an excellent specimen of the sensational sketch has been furnished by Frances Harrold and her company. It is entitled Murder Will Out, and is written and produced by W. J. Mackay. Its villain is a wealthy banker named Jabez Brant, who makes dishonourable proposals to his pretty lady clerk and typewriter, Miss Courtney. Needless to say, these are scornfully rejected, and when the scoundrel gets too pressing with his attentions, he is floored by his clerk, George Harmsworth, the young lady's sweetheart. So angered is the scoundrel at being thus thwarted that he determines on ridding himself of the couple, but ere they quit his employ he endeavours to fasten a theft on young Harmsworth. He would be successful were it not for the timely arrival of a disreputable looking individual Jeremiah Smith, who was formerly an acquaintance, and who is the only living witness of a murder and robbery committed some twenty years since by Brant. The victim transpires to have been Harmsworth's father, and Smith recognising the young man promises to aid him. In the following scene Harmsworth and the typewriter, now man and wife, are seen wandering the streets homeless and almost starving. The villain afterwards has them both secured and conveyed to a wretched-looking apartment, where, after taunting them, he lights some inflammables in the cellar beneath. Smith just manages to arrive in time to save them from a terrible death; and Brant falls apparently lifeless to the ground, a victim of his own horrible machinations. The effective finale was loudly applauded by the Canning-towniter, and was well managed, the sketch throughout being much enjoyed. Miss Harrold and her company all played efficiently their respective rôles, the actor taking the part of Smith being a resourceful and funny comedian; and the couple playing an office boy and his sweetheart also aiding largely in the merriment. Much wonderment was created by the exhibition of her powers given by Mahatma, programmed as "the greatest mystery ever put on the stage." Mahatma is blindfolded and seated on a chair near the footlights. At the back of the stage is a black-board on which one of a committee from the audience writes a number of rows of figures. The gentleman who introduces the lady then points to a figure, and Mahatma immediately names it, also adding up a sum. All her answers are given with wonderful quickness and not the slightest hesitancy, and are always correct. She also successfully names different cards taken from a pack which she could not possibly see, and without receiving, apparently, any sign from her partner. Anyone is invited to go on to the stage to try and discover "how it's done," and the show, which is varied every night during the week, has proved most interesting and mystifying. Miss Nellie Camp, Scotch comedy artiste, has given some valuable advice to her fair sisters in "Oh, be careful;" and her humorous selection, "Dairy-ma-do-ma-daddy oh," has created much laughter. A comedian with a funny style and three amusing comedy songs is Mr Paul Jones, his comical lament of an ill-treated husband, "None for me," especially appealing to his audience. "Now's the time" and "Keep a little order, please," are also acceptable numbers; and Mr Jones succeeds in extracting every ounce of humour from them. Miss Idalia May, transformation dancer, gives a pretty and exhausting exhibition, her quick changes being rapidly accomplished and her many different examples of the Terpsichorean art all being cleverly executed. The descriptive songs of Mr Arthur Denville are all delivered with earnestness and effect, "Laugh and the world laughs with you" and "Vanity Fair" being both excellent numbers; and other contributors to Mr Reif's entertaining programme are Rick and Laurel, comedy artistes; the Grahams, in a comic sketch, How I Left the Stage; Pattie Bella, burlesque actress; and Miss May Sulyard's dramatic company in sketch, For Honour. Walter Payne's Bio-Photoscope continues to give an interesting and up-to-date series of pictures, an always appreciated turn. Under the watchful eye of the genial and tactful chairman, Mr Walter Leaver, no more orderly assemblage could be found.

MR SAM MAYO has acquired a fine comic song by that clever writer, Fred Leigh, entitled "When I woke up in the morning."—Mr Percy Honri, the popular virtuoso on the concertina, returns to the London Pavilion on Monday to renew the popularity he has so deservedly gained on former visits by his artistic selections and his fine playing.—The Harvey Boys finish another successful "Stoll" tour to-night, and return to town, Monday, for four months.

THE Brothers Edgar desire to acknowledge the receipt for the Abe Holt Fund of the following sums, in addition to amount (£2 6s. 6d.) already acknowledged:—Mr Eugene Stratton, 10s.; Mr Geo. Gray, 10s. 6d.; Mr Harry Freeman, 5s.; Mr D. Cruikshanks, 2s. 6d.; Mr Paul Martinetti, 2s.; and Mr Tom Morris, 1s. Any further donations will be gratefully received and acknowledged.

MR FRANK WEEKS was an honoured guest at the banquet given by the Mayor of Southwark on Thursday evening to mark the conclusion of his year of office.

NAT TRAVERS and his Aristocrats open on Monday at the Oxford, Metropolitan, and Palace, Greenwich.—The Brothers Pollard are engaged by Mr Frederick Mouillot for the parts of the Ugly Sisters in that gentleman's production of Cinderella.—Mrs Allen M'Askell is still confined to Scarborough Hospital, and remains in a critical condition. Her husband, after five weeks' vacation, resumes business Monday next at Empire, Greenock.

THE Sisters Spellerini, daughters of a well-known Warrington tradesman, made their début in the music hall profession at the Royal Theatre of Varieties, Warrington, on Friday evening, the 28th ult. As duettists and instrumentalists they scored a signal success, and their song entitled "Army and Navy" was received with much applause.

FRED SINCLAIR and GRACIE WHITEFORD are meeting with a tremendous reception all along the line with their smart refined duologue Getting Even and their dresses are much admired.

COUNTY COUNCIL AND AMUSEMENTS.

(SPECIALLY REPORTED FOR THE ERA.)

The usual weekly meeting of the London County Council was held on Tuesday at the County Hall, Spring-gardens.

THE HAYMARKET.

A report was received from the Theatres and Music Halls Committee recommending that Mr C. S. Peach be informed that the Council had no objection to the arrangements shown on the three plans dated Oct. 8, 1904, submitted by him with regard to certain deviations from the approved plans proposed to be made at the Haymarket Theatre, provided the following conditions be complied with:—"(1) That the doors from the pit be arranged so as not to open immediately over steps; (2) that, with regard to the stairs to the dress-circle, the top step be sloped downwards instead of upwards." Agreed to.

THE LYCEUM.

The Committee had considered plans submitted by Messrs Oldroyd and Co., Limited, showing how it is proposed to provide fire-extinguishing appliances at the Lyceum Theatre. The arrangements appeared to be generally satisfactory, and the Committee recommended "That Messrs Oldroyd and Co., Limited, be informed that the Council has no objection to the arrangements shown on the plans, dated Oct. 4, 1904, submitted by them with regard to the proposed means for extinguishing fire at the Lyceum Theatre, provided the following conditions be complied with:—(1) "That a 2in. pipe be provided from the stage to the flies on the o.p. side, instead of the 1½in. pipe shown on the plans; (2) that the hydrants be arranged so as not to form projections, and that all recesses be suitably defended." The committee had considered a plan, submitted by Messrs E. Oldroyd and Co., Limited, of the fire-resisting curtain proposed to be fitted to the proscenium opening at the Lyceum Theatre. The arrangements appeared to be satisfactory, and the committee recommended "That Messrs E. Oldroyd and Co, Limited, be informed that the Council has no objection to the arrangements shown on the plan, dated Oct. 8, 1904, submitted by them with regard to the proposed fire-resisting curtain at the Lyceum Theatre, provided the following conditions be complied with:—(1) That the frame in which the curtain runs be provided with proper rollers at intervals of about 5ft., and that the framing be properly secured at the intersections; (2) that the sprinkler be furnished with stop and drain cocks, the former to be sealed open; (3) that the gearing to the fire-curtain and sprinkler be suitably protected, and that indicating plates be provided." The committee had also considered a plan, submitted by Mr B. Crewe, with regard to the Lyceum Theatre, showing the provision of teak doors and frames with fire-resisting glass, to the openings from the Lyceum Tavern to the pit entrance to the theatre. The committee recommended "That Mr B. Crewe be informed that the Council has no objection to the arrangements shown on the plan, dated Oct. 15, 1904, submitted by him with regard to the proposed provision of teak doors and frames at the Lyceum Theatre, provided that the large window glazed with plate glass be glazed instead with fire-resisting glass." The above recommendations were adopted.

NEW THEATRE, CHARLOTTE-STREET.

The Council, on July 21, 1903, approved plans of a new theatre to be erected on a site at the corner of Charlotte-street and Tottenham-street. The building is now rapidly approaching completion, and it is desired to open the theatre very shortly. The committee therefore recommended "That the seal of the Council be affixed to a certificate under section 12 of the Metropolis Management and Building Acts Amendments Act, 1878, in respect of the New Theatre, Charlotte-street, and that the certificate be issued as soon as the chairman of the Theatres and Music Halls Committee is satisfied that the building has been satisfactorily completed." Agreed to.

ORIENT THEATRE.

The committee had considered plans, submitted by Mr B. Crewe, of a theatre which it is proposed to erect at the junction of Commercial-road and Myrdle-street. "The site practically complies with the Council's regulations, and satisfactory means of exit are shown to be provided. The theatre will have seating accommodation for 1,887 persons." The committee recommended "That Mr Crewe be informed that, provided the work shown on the five plans, dated Aug. 6, 1904, submitted by him with regard to a building to be known as the Orient Theatre, and to be erected in Commercial-road, Limehouse, be commenced within six months, the Council will be prepared to grant a certificate under section 12 of 41 and 42 Vict., cap. 32, to the owner of such building, on being satisfied that the premises have been completed in accordance with the plans referred to and the regulations of the Council, and that the following conditions have been complied with:—(1) That the outlet to the hydrants in the flies be 1½in. in diameter, and that all necessary hose and fittings be provided in connection with such hydrants; (2) that chemical extincteurs of 2½ gallons capacity be provided in the auditorium, or that buckets be provided to the satisfaction of the Council; (3) that all hydrants and fittings in connection therewith as well as the chemical extincteurs, to be provided in the auditorium, be completely recessed, and that such recesses be protected by proper guard rails; (4) that the hydrants to be installed throughout the building, with the exception of those in the flies, be provided with bib-cocks for filling buckets; (5) that drawings showing the construction of the fire-resisting screen be submitted to the Council; (6) that a flap be placed on the outlet into the Council's sewer in New-road; (7) that the heating and electric lighting arrangements be made to comply with the Council's regulations." Adopted.

ROYAL COURT THEATRE.

The committee had considered plans, submitted by Mr C. E. L. Parkinson, of an iron staircase proposed to be formed from the dressing rooms at the Royal Court Theatre, Sloane-square. The committee recommended "That Mr C. E. L. Parkinson be informed that the Council has no objection to the arrangements shown on the three plans, dated Oct. 26, 1904, submitted by him with regard to the proposed iron staircase from the dressing rooms at the Royal Court Theatre, on condition that before the commencement of the work the licence of the Council to build over the Council's sewer be applied for and obtained, and that the door on the upper circle level be hung on the opposite side to that shown on the plans." Agreed to.

ALEXANDRA PALACE.

On Saturday evening the promenade and smoking concert was well attended, the London Prize Band paying a welcome return visit. The vocal numbers were well received, and some smart and successful conjuring was accomplished by Mr Owen Clark. The skating rink in the old Concert Room was reopened for the season on Saturday evening. A number of new members have joined the Welcome Club, the indefatigable and untiring secretary, Mr H. R. Moulton, being largely responsible for this addition. The annual show of chrysanthemums by the Highgate District Society is this week in evidence, and some of the blossoms are very fine specimens.

MR CHAS. H. LESTER, who is well-known in the profession for his clever photographic work, was granted a special interview with Colonel Cody (Buffalo Bill) last week. He photographed the hands of the colonel by a special process invented by himself.

STAGE PLAYS AT MUSIC HALLS.

At Marylebone Police-court, on the 28th ult., the Metropolitan Theatre of Varieties (Ltd.), Edgware-road, was summoned for on different dates in September and October unlawfully keeping the music hall for the performance of a stage play without the authority of letters patent, or the licence of the Lord Chamberlain; and Henri Gros, the managing director, and president of the London Entertainments Protection Association, was summoned, for causing and permitting to be acted and presented certain parts in a stage play, to wit, a comedy drama, called The Fighting Parson, at the hall, such place not being a patent theatre or duly licensed as a theatre. The summonses were issued at the instance of Mr Herbert Henry Blackmore, hon. secretary of the Theatrical Managers' Association. Mr Bodkin, barrister, prosecuted; and Mr J. P. Grain and Mr Walter Payne, barrister (instructed by Mr Philip J. Ratland, J.P.), defended.

Mr Bodkin said that these summonses were taken under the second section of the Theatre Act, 1843, and were undertaken by an association which had among its active members substantially the whole of the theatrical managers in London and the country, and included the names of Sir Henry Irving, Sir Charles Wyndham and Mr Tree. The prosecution was not taken without proper consideration, and was not brought with the slightest wish to press hardly on any place of public amusement; but it was felt that a distinction should be kept between theatres and music halls, and that in view of the continued encroachments made by the music halls upon the legitimate province of the theatre, it was necessary that the theatrical managers should take measures to protect their interests. For several years they took no steps in the matter; but to such an extent had the illegal production of stage plays at music halls been carried on that during the past year it was found necessary to proceed against at least a dozen music hall proprietors. The magistrates had clearly stated the law on the subject, and fines had been inflicted; but in defiance of this the stage plays had continued. The Fighting Parson had been decided to be a stage play twice or thrice, and the defendants must have known that an engagement had been entered on for its production long after the Theatrical Association had warned them about it. It was clearly a stage play, and had been submitted to the Lord Chamberlain as such and had received his sanction. Notwithstanding the fact, the defendants had produced it at the Metropolitan Music Hall for their own profit and in defiance of the law.

Mr Grain admitted that The Fighting Parson was a stage play, and that the defendants had committed a technical offence. He urged that the prosecution was an attempt on the part of the Theatrical Association to do away with their rivals. He referred to the decisions of other magistrates to show that the offence was, in fact, a purely technical one. He also pointed out that the committee of the House of Commons, which dealt with the subject in 1892, unanimously decided that it was desirable there should be legislation to entitle non-licensed places to perform sketches not exceeding forty minutes in length. In view of that finding sketches were allowed to take place, and it was not until twelve months ago, when the theatrical managers realised how keen was the competition, that they intervened. In these circumstances he asked the magistrate to inflict merely a nominal fine.

Mr Curtis Bennett said that the association was perfectly entitled to seek to protect its rights under the statute. The music halls were in their present position owing to their failing to obtain legislation on the lines suggested by the committee of 1892. This was a stage play, but the music hall was not licensed for its production. It was a serious and not a technical offence, for the defendants had wilfully broken the law in the face of the previous convictions by the other magistrates, as, it was said, it paid them to do so. This was an aggravation of the offence, and could only be met by severe penalties. He therefore fined the company £20 for the first date, and £10 for each of the other sixteen days, making £180 in all. The summons against Mr Gros was adjourned sine die, the defendant being bound over in £10 to come up if called upon.

THE SHOWMAN WORLD.

(FROM A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

As with all human affairs so has it proved true with the work of the Showmen's Guild. "The achievements of peace are more glorious than the victories of war." For every single corporation prejudiced and unreasonable in their crusade against the popular people's fairs there have been six found ready and willing to listen to reason and the organised expression of public opinion. No review, such as the one we are now giving of Parliamentary work, would be just or complete without honourable mention of these public bodies. Salford, Dewsbury, the Lancashire County Council, Carlisle, Leicester, Swansea, Rotherham, Selby, Bridlington, Newport, Erith, Llandrindod Wells, Aston Manor, Radcliffe, Leigh, Gateshead, Knaresborough, and Buxton are amongst the corporations who, after negotiations, dropped or amended their proposed inimical restrictions of the show business.

NOT the least important consideration before showmen is the keeping in active vigour and constant watchfulness this machinery of peaceful negotiations—the standing agency of justice and reason, with both authority and ability to speak at a moment's notice in defence of their trade and its many allied interests. For the past fourteen years the Guild has had this proud distinction—every attack has been met and dealt with by peaceful discussion and conference with public bodies first, and only when these ambassadors of peace have failed has the Guild insisted on a fight to a finish in the House of Commons or at the Home Office and Local Government Board.

IN most intimate connection with this work must be reckoned the kindred one of useful propaganda of the claims of the business as a legitimate trade and industry, part and parcel of the economic life of the empire, involving with it the scrutiny of the Press and the onerous work of answering all attacks made upon shows and showmen. An example of this was the reply we made to the attack on Nottingham Goose Fair given in our columns last week. To the credit of the Nottingham press, it must be said our answer to "A Ratepayer's" strictures, was reproduced in the paper that gave publicity to his attack. Scores of instances could be given of similar and most necessary work being done by the Guild; and it must never be forgotten that the power and influence of the Guild's past fourteen years' work is at the back of all that is attempted to-day. The Guild is the recognised agency of showman defence as well as the champion of the people's rights in their time-honoured fairs and open-air amusements, their national and local holidays.

BUT although "the pen is mightier than the sword," war is sometimes the only way left to gain peace. "The strong man armed" has always a better hope of gaining his just demands when it is known that, if necessary, he will fight. Probably the greatest gain the Guild has obtained for the whole body of amusement caterers is the respectful hearing its agents and officials now obtain when they have need to speak. Slowly, but surely, the whole condition of affairs is being changed for the better.

EVERY attack made on the people of the fair-ground is not only defeated, but public opinion is also being rapidly educated, and the theories, rude and crude, of the Puritanical faddists proved to be utterly without reason or justice. Rapidly a wholesome body of dependable facts and statistics is being built up. Take, for example, the census carried through the country by the one man able to do it with dependable accuracy. We refer to Lord George Sanger's estimate of the number of showpeople in the United Kingdom—70,000 persons. The delusion is deeply rooted in many minds that fairs are dying out, or becoming so out-of-date that they may be swept away or treated as a negligible quantity. We have shown in these columns over and over again that no trade or industry has shown greater power of adaptation to modern requirement, or greater quickness in recognising the movements of population, the growth of new trade and industrial centres, than the itinerant show and fairground business; that for every fair lapsing for the lack of people in the purely agricultural counties, two or more have sprung into life and being in the new and rapidly growing centres of life and trade; that, whilst our population has doubled in the past fifty or sixty years, our fairs have more than doubled, our shows are six more in numbers, and that the capital invested in the business has increased a hundredfold.

THESE are the broad facts that through the agency of the Guild have sunk deep down into the public mind. It is no longer a few wandering showmen or vandwellers, but a well-organised body of skilled workers, with enormous capital and many years of hard labour embodied in their trade, their talent of brain and hand, their honest and legitimate livelihood. All these things, and the hundred and one other interests in so large and well capitalised a trade, affect the other trades it feeds and draws from, which are linked with it by years of co-operation and mutual interests. All these considerations now are beginning to be operative, but let showmen remember that when they were without any organisation, or leadership, it was The Era that warned them of their danger—The Era that found them organisers, and that in the first instance sounded the alarm of danger and roused them as threatened people to organise their forces against an insistent and determined enemy.

ALL this may be very ancient history—but the story of it must be told to those not in the early strain and struggle of things, to those not touched by present danger, because peace has been won for them by the work of others. To them we say that the Guild at least has claims on your gratitude—and more, its work now is your charter of safety—and that the best investment you can make in your business is to see that its efficiency is fully maintained. We state all these things now because the advent of new societies has drawn off both workers and means from the Guild, and the danger is that venturing out in these new and most important enterprises the old Guild may be left without money or workers to continue its all-round and absolutely necessary work. This, we understand, is the position of affairs at the end of the show and fairground season of 1904. At any rate, we are near enough to the end of the ordinary season to be in a position to form a fairly accurate idea of how the Guild may stand at the actual close of the present financial year. We are well aware of the exceptionally bad state of business on the fair-grounds of England that marked the first working half of the year. We do not forget the cold and wet weather that utterly spoilt the fairs in the spring and the early summer. In any fair survey of the past ten months bad weather and poor trade must be taken into strict account. There has been a terrible slump in the takings at the receipt of custom of all kinds of entertainments. It is the sure sign of that shrinkage in the national wealth that our fiscal reformers are seeking to remedy. The people have not had the money to spend, and this economic fact has shown itself in the great central industrial belt of the country.

THE great summer and back-end fairs have, however, been prospered with glorious weather, and as a consequence a good rally of business. We hope that a corresponding rally will come to the funds of the Vandwellers' Protection Association; that the members who failed to renew their annual subscriptions in the first half of the year because of bad business will pay in now. Here we would deal with a criticism which has reached us. Why is it that the Guild has so few meeting now, whilst the other societies meet at all important fairs? In the first half of the year meetings were held of a most satisfactory kind—the usual meetings at London, Manchester, and King's Lynn. The Welsh meeting in June was a particularly enthusiastic one. So, too, was the gathering at the end of July at Longsight Wakes, Manchester. Other possible meetings have not taken place this autumn, because there has been no one available to organise and carry them out. This is a difficulty against which the Guild executive must seriously set its mind to provide. Local committee men must be made to depend more on their own resources, and not to look to headquarters for everything. When showmen hear of other societies holding many meetings, they must not conclude without thought that the Guild is somehow falling back in the race. The other societies have their agents, not only on the spot following the fairs, but also paid for this very purpose to organise and to carry through meetings on the fair-grounds.

IT is not so with the old society. The one paid officer is the secretary, whose paid work is to keep the books and accounts. The salary paid is not sufficient, and never has been, to enable anyone to give time and labour to the onerous work of conducting meetings to rally subscribers at our fairs. Here, we think, is a weak spot in the Guild's working methods. The committee may well consider the advisability of paying an organiser a salary sufficient to attend the principal fairs in the summer months and to organise meetings to rally support for its work. In answer to the personal appeal of the hon. chaplain over £50 was subscribed at two gatherings—the Lynn and Treorchy meetings. The foregoing considerations and suggestions we leave for our Showman World readers to ponder over. We shall return to them again. It is easy to criticise and to contrast the newborn fervent zeal of more recent organisations with the quiet but ever-continuing work of the parent society. New brooms are said to sweep clean—and new work always interests and is much more easily done. And, after all, it is well that it is so, for there is and can be no real rivalry between society and society—except and only rivalry in good work. All that we ask is that the good work of the Guild may not be overlooked or neglected in the onward march of other organisations.

THE work of the Vandwellers' and Showmen's Protection Association (to give the Guild its full name) goes on independently of all meetings. Its survey of the Press and public opinion never ceases. Its honorary and expert workers meet every danger as it arises, and this would be done if no meetings took place except the annual business ones. Its vigilant officials neither slumber nor sleep. Its Parliamentary agent scrutinises every danger in Parliament. Its solicitors grapple with legal tangles and fight every invasion of showman rights and privileges. Its members' interests are ever attended to, and the constant business of a wide-reaching and important organisation maintained. This is always going on, meetings or no meetings. In fact, after all these years of hard work and much explanation, it seems a reproach almost that it should still be found necessary to stump the fairs in order to persuade business men like showmen to defend themselves. Next week we hope to be in a position to make a most interesting (and as it touches the work of the Guild) important announcement.

MR JOHNSON has opened his new Theatre of Varieties at Neath to packed houses. The seating accommodation is perfect in every respect. Another new feature in this elaborate portable is the installation of boxes. New scenery, costumes, and a first-class company should ensure Mr Johnson a successful season. In an interview with the proprietor he was asked how he was going to make such a magnificent travelling concern pay. His reply was, "Keep up to date and you are bound to succeed." Judging by the large audiences he is right.

FROM the great North Round we have news of the locale of the following well-known concerns:—At Jarrow-on-Tyne Mrs Testo's Cinématograph theatre, W. J. Beavis's variety show, Davidson mechanical model, "The pit at work," Messrs Richardson Bros., Limited, electric machine set, the galloping horses, and George Pinninger's steam horses; the shooting galleries and rifle saloons of Messrs Rosher. H. O'Brian, W. Testo, H. Stephens, T. Lowther, and G. Pinninger. The park swings, high fliers, &c., of Messrs W. Spence, Geo. Pinninger, R. Brindle, A. Newsome, and Mr Coutman. Emma sheets, coker shies, football games, roll-up boards, and the usual fair-ground varieties by the following locally celebrated caterers:—Messrs J. Millar, G. Gray, sen., L. Rich, M. Watkins. W. Sedgmore, J. Thwaites, A. Newsome, T. Lowther, G. Pinninger, Geo. Gray, jun., and J. W. Gray. On the ground at Hetton, James Manders's high-class machine set, the flying cockerells, shooting concerns by Wm. Stroud, swings and high-fliers by Messrs S. Cain and T. Hartshorn, Emma sheets and coker throwing games by Messrs H. Shaw, T. Cain, and J. Wright.

AT East Hartlepool is the W. and B. Murphy aggregation.

AT Middlesbrough H. Caris's electric jumping horses, the Cinématograph theatre of Mr Geo. Payne, and several minor novelty booths, shooting ranges, bottle batteries, and various amusements by Messrs Robinson, Halliday, and others.

AT West Auckland is Mr R. Mackney's theatre of varieties and the great ghost illusion.

AT Blyth (the scene of the disastrous fire at Lind's waxworks) Walter Murphy has his superb Venetian gondola set, and Mr Toogood his shooters and rifle gallery.

SALISBURY FAIR was the trysting place of thousands last week. Here, too, as at Chichester, there is a certain alarm in the public mind about the continuance of the fair. We bid the good folk of Great Sarum Town not to be alarmed. Fairs with so great a warrant as theirs die very hard, if, indeed, their vitality is not able to surprise as well as defeat the enemy.

THE charter to hold Salisbury Fair was granted by Henry I. as far back as 1115. In the charter, which is preserved in the Library of the Cathedral, one of the clauses runs:—

You are to know that I have given to the Church of St. Mary in Salisbury, and to Roger, the bishop thereof, the right of holding a fair for a week at Salisbury, namely, on the Feast of St. Mary in September, three days before and three days after.

Henry III. granted another charter in 1226-7, which says:—

We likewise will and allow to the afore-named bishop and his successors that they may hold, once a year, for ever, one Fair in the afore-named city of New Sarum, to last from the vigil of the Assumption of the Blessed Mary until the subsequent octave of the same festival, and in every week one market in the same place all day Tuesday, with all the liberties and untaxed customs that appertain to fairs and markets of this kind.

Formerly of six days' duration, it now lasts but a little over two. Formerly the shows were allowed to enter the market place on Sunday evening, now they are kept out of it until Monday morning.

BUT although modern conditions of life, mainly through the migration of the workers to the busier centres of trade, reduce the fair to days, it is none the less enjoyed by the happy crowds that gather to see the fun of the fair. The excellent shows and fairground novelties on this round were detailed in our last week's report of Sherborne.

WE notice that a local paper lends itself to a tirade against the continuance of the fair. It is freely and fully admitted that the fair has a great historic vantage in the past of the city and the county. Its venerable charter is referred to, and then the attack begins thus:—"Charter or no charter, changes have been effected from time to time, all tending to improve the fair, until at length it shall be improved out of existence altogether. But at least one other fair must be held, for the lease of the tolls has another year to run, so that those who are still in love with the annual exhibition need not violently alarm themselves for the present. Before the Council proceeds, however, it would be well if they gathered the opinion of, say the residents in the Market-place—who, like Homocea, surround the spot—whose views in the matter should have as much weight in the settlement of the affair as those of anybody else, for to none must the delights of the occasion, if delight there be, seem more desirable, or the nuisance, if nuisance there be, seem more unbearable." Certainly, by all means ascertain the opinion of traders and other residents in the Market-square; but that is not the only Court of Appeal; there is the mind and will of the people.

WE can assure the writer of the attack on the fair that the Home Secretary will not abolish it without full ballot taken of the people. Perhaps this drastic reformer—or shall we say abolisher?—of the people's open-air amusements is not aware of the terms and conditions of The Abolition of Fairs Act. No fair may be abolished on the mere word or wish of a town council. It can only be abolished under the statute provided, and before the Home Secretary sanctions the operation of the Act, a public inquiry must be held and the consent of the people obtained.

THIS has been again and again tested, and again and again have the people arisen in their might. Justice has been done to the showmen, and the fair privileges of the town preserved. Necessary reform, if you please, good sirs; but showmen, like other mortals, object to be improved out of existence. With reference to the powers of local authorities, we advise our readers to master the interesting facts in "The Synopsis of Already Existing Bye-Laws," compiled by the Rev. T. Horne, and to be found in the "Showman's Year Book," a manual in the possession of every paying member of the Guild. Therein is set out in useful tables, city, borough, and county bye-laws, good and bad bye laws, just as they now exist throughout the country. No showman need sin against good law and government in ignorance of existing conditions and restrictions. He may ascertain the towns to avoid and the towns wherein to exercise his trade in peace and quiet, without the let and hindrance of over-officious official persons.

THE interesting test case we chronicled last week, Ebley's Portable Theatre, Blaina, Wales, is a most important one to be remembered—a most salutary check to the ever-growing exactions and restrictions of small local bodies. It cannot be too widely known that neither parish councils nor district councils have power to make bye-laws affecting shows for portable erections.

NO authority less than a county administrative area has jurisdiction. Cities, boroughs, county boroughs, and counties may make and administer such bye-laws, so when the would-be very important official of a parish council or urban district council assumes an inquisitorial power the law does not allow him. The showman is quite well within his rights in asking to see the letter of the law under which the official presumes to interfere. Nay, he may have on demand by tendering the proper fee a copy of all existing bye-laws in the county area in which the council is situated. An extremely valuable question was also settled by Blaina test case, and that is that county councils cannot delegate their authority to parish or district councils. We congratulate Mr Ebley on a victory of the utmost importance and far-reaching consequence.

ON Sunday afternoon, Oct. 23, all that was mortal of Agnes, the wife of William Wright, sen., one of the best known of Lancashire showmen, was laid to rest in the Leeds Cemetery. Mrs Wright had been in ill-health for a long time, and although the immediate demise was sudden, it was not unexpected. Mrs Wright died in her living waggon on Tommyfield, Oldham. The funeral took place from the house of Mrs Spencer, 9 Victoria-street, Hunslet-road, Leeds, a daughter of the deceased, who was buried with the full rites of the Roman Catholic Church. The coffin was covered with the many wreaths sent from various parts of the country. As the cortège passed through the streets on its way to "God's Acre" many expressions of sympathy were evoked from the hundreds of onlookers. The mourners included Mr W. Wright, Mr R. Wright, Mr James Wright, Mr Wright, jun., and Mrs Wright, Mr C. Wright, Mr Walter Shaw and Mrs Shaw, Mr J. Spence and Mrs Spence, Mr J. T. Cooper and Mrs Cooper, Mr Joseph Corrigan and Mrs Corrigan, Mr Ben Mitchell, Mr Lor. Crick and Mrs Crick, Mrs Crick, Mr Adolp Crick and Mrs Crick, Mrs Rhodes and daughters, Mrs M'Neil and daughters, Mr R. Kent, Mrs Whittingdon, Mrs Baker, J. Shaw and six grandchildren of the deceased lady, Mr W. Marsh, Messrs B. and J. Marney, and numerous Leeds friends were also present. The wreaths, which were of the most magnificent character, were from Mr W. Mitchell, Mr B. Mitchell, Mr M. Whatmore, Mr J. Green, Mr Gal Hague, Mrs Jewell, Mr Richard Sedgwick, Messrs P. and J. Collins, Col Clarke, Lorenzo Crick, Mrs Crick and family, J. W. Hargreaves, Mr and Mrs W. Wright, jun., Mr E. Holland, Mr J. Corrigan, Mr and Mrs Cornwell, Mr S. Mercer, Mr and Mrs Spence, Mr and Mrs C. Wright, Mr and Mrs W. Shaw, Mr J. Gilmour, Mrs A. Cooper.

WARMINSTER kept its annual pleasure fair with accustomed vigour and local interest. Present were Purchase's Royal menagerie and waxworks, Dooner's superb Electrograph with up-to-date war and local films, Taylor's school of athletes and boxers, and Mr Smith's abnormal exhibit and two minor shows of fine art completed the exhibition list. The excellent machines of all sorts were supplied by the well-known Gloucester caterer, Mr Wm. Symonds, who exhibited his colossal switchback and Excelsior steam horses. Two sets of juvenile swings were provided by John Gratton, three shooting concerns by Messrs Haines and Simpson, and there were also a goodly array of stalls and minor fair ground novelties.

AT Windsor recently Mary Ann Thomas, William Hastings, Samuel Jones, Richard Matthew Warwick, and William Biddell were summoned for unlawfully, in connection with a roundabout placed on certain vacant ground near to a street, called St. Leonard's-road, causing to be made by means of an organ a loud and continuous noise, to the annoyance of the residents and passengers, on Oct. 22. Mr Watson Wright, solicitor, of Leicester, and solicitor to the Showmen's Protection Association, appeared for the defence. Evidence having been heard, the summons was dismissed.

AT Filey, Yorks, were Messrs Waddington's twin steam yachts, Mr Goldthorpe Marshall's Venetian gondolas. The shows here were Captain Thos. Payne's electric Bioscope, Sahib Leo's Egyptian hall, Mr Charles Relph's Wee M'Gregor, the smallest draught-horse in the world. All the "fun of the fair" was provided by Messrs T. Chapman, A. Barker, and Carvill. The showmen combined business with pleasure at this pretty seaside resort. Each day had its special programme of fishing, boating, rock-climbing, motoring, &c., and a very enjoyable week has been spent.

WE understand that Messrs Thos. Relph and William Pedley, exhibition proprietors, are in the Normanton and Pontefract districts making extensive preparations for their grand tour of 1905.

THE ancient St. Luke's Fair, Kidwelly, was duly held last week and closed on Monday of this week. This fair is for the hiring of farm servants, the selling of horses, cattle, and pigs, as well as for pleasure. The weather this year was very fine and there was consequently a splendid attendance at the pleasure fair, at which, of course, Messrs H. Studt and Son's fine gondolas occupied premier position. Other shows included A. Good's cinématograph, Watkin's hall of laughter, distorting mirrors, and fine-art gallery; E. Booth's fine shooter and swings &c., Moore's little horses, J. Day's Mollys, and David Boswell's cokernut shies, &c., were amongst numerous other stalls. On Monday evening Mr Studt, with his usual generosity, treated all the children of Kidwelly to free rides on his beautiful gondolas.

WE are able to announce the reopening of Samuel's Exhibition Palace, Henry-street, Dublin, on Nov. 21. A very handsome fire-proof iron staircase has been erected and everything possible has been done for the comfort of the patrons.

"GRANNY" WHITE, said to be the oldest travelling show-woman in the country, who died at Falkirk on Monday at the age of eighty-nine, was born at Shoreditch. She and her husband (Joseph White) attended fairs all over the country. At one time their van was drawn by four dogs. "Granny" White was a total abstainer. She is mourned by a family of six, all of whom are in the show business.

AT Southwark Police-court, on Tuesday, Raymond Edward Woolgar, showman, was summoned before Mr Paul Taylor by Dr. A. Salter, of Jamaica-road, Bermondsey, for playing or causing to be played a steam organ in Major-road, Bermondsey, to the annoyance of the neighbouring residents. Mr Philcox, who prosecuted, said that every winter a show, with steam roundabout, &c., was held on some waste ground in Major-road. For two or three years the defendant had been in charge of a roundabout with a steam organ, which was a great nuisance. Dr. Salter spoke to him about the matter a few weeks ago, and he discontinued using the organ on every day except Fridays and Saturdays. Dr. Salter, a member of the Bermondsey Borough Council, said that he lived twenty yards away from the show ground, and when the organ was playing the noise was intolerable, and it was impossible for him to study or do any serious work. The neighbouring inhabitants had sent complaints to the borough council, and everything possible had been done to give effect to them. The council tried to stop the roundabout being taken on to the waste ground by putting some posts in the pavement, but the defendant defeated this by driving his traction engine on the pavement. Other evidence showed that the show caused some of the worst characters to assemble in Major-road. The owner of the land had been petitioned not to let the place for shows, but he had refused, stating that he realised more by letting the land for shows than he would if houses were upon it. The magistrate imposed a fine of 40s., the maximum penalty; and £1 3s. 6d. costs, with the alternative of twenty-one days' imprisonment.

AT Holloway's New Empire Theatre, Astwood Bank, this week we have had on the boards The Moat Farm Mystery, Lashed to the Mast, East Lynne, A Woman's Love, Buffalo Bill, and Firematch the Trooper; also a grand singing competition by six local gentlemen. At Astwood Bank we still have Mr Eagle's grand photographic studios, which are doing splendid business.

COUNTY COUNCIL LICENSING.

The Theatres and Music Halls Committee of the County Council sat at Clerkenwell Sessions House on Wednesday to hear applications for the renewal of licences for music, dancing, and stage-plays for places north of the Thames, with Mr W. B. Yates in the chair. The applications numbered 232, only four of which were opposed.

On the application for the renewal of music and dancing and stage play licences to the London Exhibitions Buildings, Earl's-court, Mr J. P. Grain explained that some complaints had been made of objectionable pictures in the Mutoscope instruments, and gave an undertaking that there should be nothing of the sort in the future. The committee decided to recommend the renewal of the licence.

Mr C. F. Gill, K.C., supported the application for a renewal of the music and dancing licence for the Empire Theatre of Varieties, Leicester-square. The licence was recommended for renewal.

Mr Gill also applied for a provisional licence for music and dancing for the London Coliseum, St. Martin's-lane. The Chairman—When are you going to open? Mr Gill—In December. There will be a meeting of the Committee between this and the opening. The Chairman intimated that the Committee would recommend the granting of the licence.

Among the places in connection with which application for licences either for music, music and dancing, or stage plays were unopposed and recommended for renewal were:—Saddler's Wells Theatre, Olympia, Royal Agricultural Hall, Beechstein Hall, Madame Tussaud and Sons, the Oxford Music Hall, the Steinway Hall, the People's Palace, the Alhambra, Leicester-square, London Pavilion, St. James's Hall, and Tivoli Music Hall. Applications for transfers of licences which were unopposed and recommended related to, among other places, the Royal Court Theatre, Chelsea; Lyric Opera House, Hammersmith; the Royal Music Hall, Holborn; and the Coronet Theatre, Kensington.

Mr J. De Frece asked for licences for stage plays and music and dancing for the Grand Theatre, Fulham. The Committee intimated that he could not be permitted to have the two. Mr De Frece accordingly abandoned his application for stage plays, and the Committee promised to recommend the granting of his other application.

On behalf of Mr Thomas Barrasford, Mr Travers Humphreys applied for a music and dancing licence for the Lyceum Theatre, which, he said, was to be a music hall. The dancing would be confined to the stage, and no application would be made for an excise licence. Mr Barrasford took the same view as the Committee, and would not have a liquor licence if it could be avoided. The Chairman said the Committee would recommend the granting of the application.

Mr S. Meyer appeared on behalf of Mr H. E Moss in support of an application for a music and dancing licence for the Hippodrome, and asked for the removal or modification of the restriction now attached to his licence, "that no intoxicating drinks shall be sold or consumed on the premises." Mr F. Hinde, representing Mr C. Pinhorn, the Rev. J. H. Cardwell, and Mr H. L. D'Arcy Jaxone, opposed on the following grounds:—(1) That the sale of intoxicating drink is not necessary, or desirable, in a place of public entertainment; (2) that the neighbourhood is well supplied with licences for the sale of intoxicating liquor. (3) That the licence should only be granted on the condition that no intoxicating drink should be sold or consumed on the premises. Mr Meyer said Mr Moss had always felt that he suffered under a hardship by being deprived of a licence when all the other places of amusement round about had a liquor licence. Mr Hinde said as a matter of fact the Hippodrome had never had a licence since it was opened. The Chairman—We need not trouble you. The licence would be recommended for renewal on the same terms as last year.

Mr Crispe, K.C., who supported the application of Mr T. E. Polden for a music and dancing licence for the Palace Theatre of Varieties, asked for the removal of the restrictions as the sale of intoxicating drink in the auditorium. Mr F. Hinde opposed on behalf of his clients, mentioned in the case of the Hippodrome. Mr Crispe said it was not at all likely that the directors of the Palace would apply for the removal of the restriction if their interests would be imperilled by so doing. The granting of their wishes would be a great convenience to the large number of people who frequent the Palace Theatre. Mr Hinde said he had to oppose the application, on the same grounds as in the case of the Hippodrome. The Chairman—I don't think we need trouble you. The same as last year.

Notice of opposition by Mr F. Hinde, on behalf of Mr C. Pinhorn, having been withdrawn, the Committee intimated that the application for the renewal of the licence for stage plays for the King's Theatre, Hammersmith, to Mr J. B. Mulholland would be recommended.

MR. FRANK LIND'S WAXWORKS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

Sir,—In reference to my letter of appeal which you inserted in your issue of the 22nd ult. respecting my loss through the late disastrous fire in Blyth, when I not only lost my waxworks, but all my clothing and effects and, what I valued most of all, my conjuring tricks and apparatus, all my testimonials, press notices, &c; and, as I said before, barely escaped with our lives, with only what we had on our backs, I thought that some kind friends would generously come forward to assist us, as we have absolutely nothing pending the decision of the insurance company, and goodness knows when that will be. I can never replace all I have lost, and £350 will not cover my actual financial loss. In my time, when known as Dr. Lind, the illusionist and entertainer, and also since I have been connected with exhibition business, I have always been the first to help others, and hundreds at the present time, if they spoke truthfully, would testify that I have given them another start, and helped all I could to the extent of my power; and yet now, when I do not know which way to turn or what to do owing to my straitened circumstances, none have come forward to assist me in my time of trouble except Mr Crouch, of Glasgow, who sent me a small amount, which was most acceptable. After over a quarter of a century of professional life I did think there would be a few who would generously come forward to help me in my trouble.

Yours faithfully, H. FRANK LIND, F.O.S.
25, Percy-street, Blyth, Nov. 2.

Total value of Waxwork, Novelty, and Fine Art Exhibition, all my furniture and effects, clothing, curios, relics, conjuring tricks, and apparatus was at cost, £520—was partially insured for £175, of which I am only to get £145, and that when the Board meets—so while the grass is growing the steeds are starving. My wife, two children, and myself to keep on nothing.

THE next meeting of the British Roundabout Proprietors and Showmen's Union will be held at the Coffee Tavern, Rotherham, on Tuesday, at 2·10 p.m.

MR ALF WARDHAUGH now retired from the music hall profession, has taken over the Comedy Bar, Lisle-street (off Northumberland-street), Newcastle-on-Tyne, which is within a minute from all halls and theatres. He will be pleased to welcome friends, old and new.

"THE ERA" can be obtained at any of Smith and Sons' bookstalls throughout the provinces.

(SPECIAL TO THE ERA.)

A GENERAL meeting of the members of the No. 1 branch N.U.T.S.E, the Society of Theatrical Carpenters, and Heads of Departments' Association will be held on Sunday evening, at 7 30, in the St. George's Hall, Westminster-bridge-road, opposite the end of Waterloo-road, S.E. Mr J. Cullen, the president, will preside. The Executive Committee will present a report on the question of the alteration of title, amendment to rules, and amalgamation with the Society of Theatrical Carpenters. A resolution approving the recommendations of the committee will be submitted. In view of above meeting, there will not be a meeting of theatrical employees in the Royal Standard, Fleming-street, on Sunday, or on any other Sunday this month.

MR ALFRED DE ROTHSCHILD has sent a donation of £5 5s. to the benevolent funds, in aid of which the concert arranged by the Musicians' and Stage Employees' Societies will be given at the Royal Opera House on Sunday, Nov. 20. The directors of the Alhambra Theatre Company have sent £2 2s. Mr F. R. Benson and Mr Oswald Stoll have applied for tickets. The programme of music will be as follows:—March, "Fame and Glory," by A. E. Matt, specially composed for the occasion, conducted by the composer; overture, William Tell, Rossini; "Invocation to Battle," Rienzi, Wagner; "Suite Pittoresque," Massenet; overture, "1812," Tschaikovsky; and overture, Tannhauser, Wagner. Sir Alexander Mackenzie will conduct two orchestral items. The conductors of the military band are Mr F. L. Kettlewell, conductor of the British Imperial Military Band; Mr W. J. Price, conductor of the Apollo Imperial Military Band, and Mr G. Bryer, conductor of the Alexander Imperial Military Band. The accompanist will be Mr Percy Pitt.

MR C. PORTER, who has been master carpenter for many years at the Shaftesbury Theatre, will resume that position for Miss Olga Nethersole.

MR ALBERT WOOD has been engaged by Mr Carr as master carpenter at the Royalty Theatre, which opens on Monday.

AT the meeting of the No. 1 Branch of the N.U.T.S.E., on Wednesday evening, several applications for grants from the benevolent fund were dealt with. The settlement of a claim for compensation was reported.

THIS year has been an unfortunate one for many sections of theatrical employees, but more so for theatrical carpenters. The present demand, which has practically found employment for all West-end carpenters, is the more welcome.

MR ROBERT ANDREWS, while not fully recovered from his illness, has returned to work at the Criterion Theatre. Mr Andrews is also in charge of the stage at Wyndham's.

MR C. SHARP, master carpenter at the Adelphi Theatre; Mr P. Sheridan, electrician, the Crown Theatre, Peckham; and Mr Hatch, master carpenter of the Royal Princess's Theatre, Glasgow, have applied for membership in the Heads of Departments' Association. The application of the latter is recommended by Mr Richard Waldon, the proprietor and manager of the Royal Princess's, where Mr Hatch is employed.

THE Theatrical and Music Hall Employees' Club in Dublin is progressing so satisfactorily that the committee are looking out for more commodious premises. Arrangements are also in hand for the annual dance.

MR JOHN WHITE, the stage-manager at the Empire, Dublin, and the captain of the renowned Dublin tug-of-war team, has invented a new drop curtain device. It is a simple and instantaneous release, by which any number of cloths or suspended material may be instantly dropped to the stage in case of fire.

THE second annual concert in aid of the Benevolent Funds of the Musicians' and Stage Employees' Societies will take place on the 20th inst., in the Royal Opera House, Covent-garden, by kind permission of Messrs Frank Rendle and Neil Forsyth. There will be an orchestra of 200 and a military band of 150. Sir Alexander Mackenzie has kindly consented to conduct the orchestra. The list of patrons includes Her Grace the Duchess of Leeds, the Countess of Carrington, the Earl of Carrington, Sir Henry Irving, Sir Charles V. Stanford, the Hon. W. F. D. Smith, M.P., Messrs Geo. Edwardes, Cyril Maude, H. E. Moss, Oswald Stoll, W. S. Gilbert, Henry Arthur Jones, Lewis Waller, Arthur Bourchier, Alfred Moul, Frank Curzon, T. B. Davis, F. R. Benson, Martin Harvey, Sidney Jones, Frank Rendle, and Neil Forsyth. His Grace the Duke of Bedford has kindly placed his private box at the disposal of the concert committee. There will be a high-class programme of vocal and instrumental music. Tickets may be obtained from the honorary secretaries, 29, Wellington-street, Strand.

ON the stage of the Palace of Varieties, Manchester, last Saturday evening, an informal and interesting "extra turn" was given. The master carpenter, Mr Thomas Povey, surrounded by his working staff, presented to Mr Charles Davies (who has held the post of stage-manager for seven years at the Palace), a gold-mounted umbrella, suitably inscribed, and thanking him for the way he had treated "the boys," wished him "good luck" in his new enterprise.

NOTICES and reports of meetings, &c., are invited from the various societies with which stage employees are connected.

NEW MUSIC.

"SONGS OF THE EAST," by E. Duncan. Metzler and Co. The happy idea of "Songs from the East"—Japan, China, and Russia—has inspired Mr Duncan, and the result is a series of melodies founded on popular songs. A description is given of some, those of China being naturally the most quaint, as well as the most ancient. The author says:—"The old pieces of the little collection are, as might be anticipated, those hailing from China. When it is borne in mind that the Chinese musician deals only in melody—harmony being no further advanced than the combinations furnished forth by fifths and fourths, the excellence of the few airs quoted becomes strikingly apparent. No nation in the world has done better with so small means. Though the Chinaman sings or plays without expression of any kind, it is quite obvious that the tunes will gain if treated in more sympathetic mood. Of the Japanese pieces there is little to remark; they show no more merit than the Chinese airs, and lack the antiquity of the latter." The accompaniments to the songs sometimes give them a rather modern expression. But frankly we do not see how they could have been done more effectively, and we must cordially congratulate the artistic skill employed.

Messrs Metzler have also published a new edition of Wagner's "Rule Britannia" overture, arranged in various ways. This fine overture, one of the composer's earlier works, has been almost forgotten; but we may be sure it will now be widely circulated, as it is arranged for military bands and a number of instruments. It was written during Wagner's first visit to London, in 1839, in the hope that the overture would be played by the Philharmonic Society.

ADVERTISERS and SUBSCRIBERS who are moving about, and who have their Copy of "THE ERA" sent direct from this Office, 49, Wellington-street, Strand, are requested to forward the Addresses for their Papers not later than the Tuesday in each Week.

WONDERLAND.

A CHAT WITH MR. JACK WOOLF.

(BY OUR OWN COMMISSIONER.)

To the average middle-aged East-ender the name of "Wonderland" counts for a great deal. He has known it as a home of melodrama, as a training place for volunteers, as a house where several now well-established music hall artists made their début, as an exhibiting ground for all manner of freaks and weird shows, and latterly as an establishment in which boxing tournaments are held. But it may be news even to some folks in Whitechapel to be told that Wonderland stands on one of the most historic sites in London. At one time the old East London Theatre stood on this plot of ground; and this plot of ground, too, has witnessed some of the triumphs of the late Charles Dillon and the veteran J. B. Howe. The name of the old Effingham Theatre was changed to the East London Theatre, which was burnt down in 1879. Mr Abrahams was the owner of the above theatre for fifty years. When Wonderland sprang up in its place it was owned by Mr Morris Abrahams, the worthy father-in-law of the present proprietor, Mr Jack Woolf. Melodrama and variety turns were presented before the footlights, sometimes as many as three pieces being played in one night. On Mr Abrahams taking over the Pavilion Theatre, Mile-end-road, Wonderland was converted into a drill-hall for the local volunteers. In November, 1887, Mr Woolf first took over Wonderland, but when he commenced to turn it into a place of entertainment he was heavily restricted by the County Council, and therefore was not able to proceed as far in his plans as he would otherwise have done. "Variety" was Mr Woolf's watchword, and the music hall habitué with the most epicurean tastes could hardly have desired a greater variety in the shows than was afforded at Wonderland. As we have already said, it was at one period of its history the happy hunting-ground of freaks. Not a few of the biggest human curiosities in the world originally made their first bow before an audience at Wonderland. "The lobster-clawed lady, now with Barnum's," says Mr Woolf, "was introduced by me. I also brought out the ossified man, Murphy, the Irish giant, as well as the Orisso Twins, three-legged boy; also the late Dr. Lyn and Arthur Auton finished their public career under my management. At one time I ran a circus here, and engaged troupes of twenty and more performers. Later on I had an Oriental Yiddish company, presenting Hebrew sketches, which proved an immense attraction." East-end folk still have very lively recollections of the beauty competitions, baby shows, trance ladies, &c., arranged by Mr Woolf at Wonderland a few years ago. In fact, there is very little in the way of public entertainments that that gentleman has not put before his patrons; and the patrons, it may be said, have long recognised in him an entrepreneur of great enterprize and originality. Then, it should be borne in mind that, in addition to the heavy work devolving upon him as a provider of amusements he has performed notable service in several public positions in the district of Whitechapel. He was a member of the Board of Works, a vestryman, a guardian of the poor, and one of the trustees for the parish of Whitechapel.

That Mr Woolf is a man to whom hard work comes to be conquered as the sun conquers darkness is evidenced by the fact that when he ran Wonderland as a variety house he used not only to superintend the whole of his productions, but also performed the duties of stage-manager, stage carpenter, ticket-collector, and dramatic author. He claims to be the forerunner of Jewish plays and sketches. Mr Woolf has frequently been to the fore in matters of charity. He it was who organised the great East-end carnival which took place in June, 1900. He acted as the chief marshal of the huge procession, and largely owing to his efforts a sum of £1,500 was handed over to the Daily Telegraph Widows and Orphans Fund, started to relieve distress consequent upon the late South African War. Mr Woolf has a decided taste for adventure, though we certainly don't envy him one experience he had. It was when he entered a den of lions, unaccompanied by a lion-tamer, at Wonderland, in 1899. He had an extremely narrow escape from death on that occasion, owing to a sudden fit of ferocity on the part of one of the lions. However he managed to find time to smoke a cigar half through, and to emerge from the den unhurt. He was presented with a gold medal for his plucky conduct.

For some time Mr Woolf was the proprietor of the Britannia Theatre, producing at that house a notable pantomime of the old-fashioned type, entitled King Crookd, which proved very popular with the residents of Hoxton. While at the "Brit." he gathered round him nearly all the old favourites who had from time to time graced its boards. He sold the Britannia in 1902.

As we glance over some of the old programmes of Wonderland, there comes the reflection that the place was appropriately named after all. What with baby shows, eating contests, boys' treacle-roll competitions, championships for butchers cutting sheep into joints, shaving matches, in which the winner was the one who performed his work in the shortest time and efficiently at that; firewood-cutting competitions, market-porters' basket-carrying contests, exhibitions of freaks, &c., we should imagine that Mr Woolf ably maintained a reputation as a provider of wonders. He has on more than one occasion shown himself to be possessed of no small amount of shrewdness when there was the least possibility of getting a cheap advertisement. One week things were "a bit flat" at Wonderland- but let Mr Woolf tell the story himself. "I saw that it was desirable to create a bit of a stir," says he, "and one morning racked my brain for a few ideas. I had a lady who had been placed in an hypnotic trance, and one day I engaged a carriage drawn by a pair of greys, and accompanied by a postilion. A coffin was put in the carriage, and my hypnotic gentleman with his trance lady paraded through the streets until they got to the city of London, when the lady was instructed by the mesmerist to distribute hand bills. It was not long before a dislocation in the traffic occurred, and the police stopped our people in Houndsditch. A summons for creating an obstruction was issued against the lady, but the City policeman whose duty it was to serve the notice found himself in an awkward predicament. The lady was still in her trance, and lay in the coffin at Wonderland. Finally, on the advice of another constable, the summons was pinned to the lady's blouse, the second officer acting as a witness of the serving process. The case was heard at the Guildhall before the then Lord Mayor and a fine of ten shillings was imposed, which I paid with all haste and joyfulness, for the advertisement was cheap at the price, as the case was placarded all over London. For several days afterwards the assistance of a small body of police had to be requisitioned to keep the huge crowds in order outside Wonderland."

Of course, as is well known, Wonderland is now given over entirely to exhibitions of the noble art of self-defence. All things considered, the hall is well conducted, and if feelings are carried a little higher than usual, as happens on some occasions, only a word to, or a look at, "the boys" from Mr Woolf is sufficient to ensure order. Mr Woolf knows the people he is dealing with, and they know him, and they know, too, that he is not the sort of man to stand any nonsense. It should be mentioned that at all the boxing matches which are held at Wonderland collections are made on behalf of the hospitals. Within the last three or four months a sum of £74, 10s. has been obtained in this way. More than half of that amount has been paid to the Landon Hospital of which institution Mr Woolf is a life governor. He has also sent various donations to the Actors' Benevolent Fund, the Music Hall Benevolent Fund, the Music Hall Home, and other charities of a like character.

Mr Woolf has a rare collection of theatrical and artistic mementos. One of them is a capital oil-painting of the late Mrs Siddons, another being a picture of Mr J. B. Howe in his character of Richard III., presented to Mr Woolf in 1897. The latter recalls that the last words spoken by Mr Howe in public were those of Rip Van Winkle—"May you live long and prosper." Mr Woolf has, in addition, quite a multitude of portraits of theatrical and music hall celebrities, both of the old and the new school, and he is the happy possessor of Drury-lane playbills dated over one hundred and fifty years ago. Among the documents that he treasures most of all is a complimentary letter from the late Queen Victoria.

Miss Gypsy Woolf, the well-known and talented music hall artiste, is a daughter of the subject of this interview, and is rapidly making a big name for herself in the profession. It would be difficult to meet a busier man than Mr Woolf in a week's tramp. Our conversation with him the other day was disturbed over and over again by callers, but throughout the hurry and the bustle, when other people seemed somewhat to lose a goodly portion of their mental equilibrium, Mr Woolf showed himself to be cool, well-balanced of mind, and imperturbable throughout. When making calls it is always his rule to cycle, and the dirty, greasy, and dangerous thoroughfares of the East-end have no terrors for him. To the journalist who hankers after an insight into Ghetto life, we can thoroughly recommend Mr Woolf.

"CHAFFING" AN ACTOR.

At the South-West London Police-court, on Tuesday, Marius Girard, an actor, residing at 58, Gladstone-street, St. George's-road, Southwark, was charged before Mr Lane, K.C., with assaulting Sidney John Gates, a tramcar conductor in the service of the London County Council.

The complainant said there was a temporary breakdown in the tramcar service, causing some delay at Clapham. The prisoner, who was a passenger, complained and asked how much longer they were going to stay. The witness replied that the prisoner knew as much as he did. The prisoner accused him of insolence, and walked away. The witness called out, "There's nothing broke; we shall overtake you." The prisoner returned, demanded his number, and struck him in the mouth, aiming other blows with his umbrella, but he warded them off with his arm.

The prisoner—Weren't you very impertinent?—No.

Did you not say I should not be out so late, and things of that sort?—Yes, I said that.

The magistrate—People have a right to be out late at night, and your remark was uncalled for.

Police-constable 517 W mentioned that when the prisoner was in his custody the prosecutor made an effort to strike him.

The driver of the car also gave evidence, and spoke of the expression "Nothing broke" as innocent chaff, but did not know the meaning of it. After the conductor made that remark the prisoner set about him.

The magistrate—He did not like the chaff.

The prisoner, in his defence, said he had been to see a friend at Balham, and after sitting in the car for about ten minutes he asked the conductor very politely how much longer he thought they would have to remain. The prosecutor was very impertinent, and the witness told him so. He left the car to continue the journey on foot. The complainant shouted after him "There's nothing broke, old man; we shall catch you up." He returned to demand his number. The prosecutor brushed him aside with his arm, and throwing up his hand he by accident touched his face. He afterwards wanted to fight him, and the witness used my umbrella, conduct which he very much regretted. While he was in the hands of the policeman the prosecutor showed his pugilistic capabilities by endeavouring to strike him.

The magistrate said it was no part of the conductor's duty to chaff members of the public. The prosecutor had far better act respectfully, and as he brought the whole thing on himself by his misconduct the charge would be dismissed.

MESSRS C. W. MURPHY AND DAN LIPTON have just supplied Messrs Francis, Day, and Hunter with a pretty and effective number. It is entitled, "Run, run, you little ones." The song is of the "Bogey-man type," the "Bogey" in this instance being the chimney sweep. Pantomime producers who are catering for the children should on no account miss securing this delightful little ditty.

PRESENTATION.—The first visit of The Cherry Girl to Swindon proved a popular success, the local theatre being crowded at each performance. The visit closed on Saturday last amidst extraordinary enthusiasm from an overcrowded audience. During an interval in act two a pleasing little incident occurred. Mr Lubbock, the manager of the company, came before the footlights accompanied by Mr Alfred Manners, the lessee of the Queen's Theatre. Mr Lubbock then announced that he had a very pleasant duty to perform. On behalf of his company he was about to make Mr Manners a small present to commemorate the fact that that week had witnessed the breaking of all records as regarded the attendance at that playhouse. It was also intended as a token of the company's regard and esteem of the kindness they had enjoyed at that gentleman's hands, and the kind reception they had during the week. Mr Lubbock then handed Mr Manners a handsome gold English lever watch, suitably inscribed, which had been subscribed for by all the members of the company. When Mr Manners stepped forward to express his gratitude for such a beautiful gift, he received a flattering ovation from the company by whom he was surrounded and from the vast audience.

SHOWMEN'S FIRE INSURANCE.

A CHAT WITH F. F. POPE.

"Showmen's fire insurance," says Mr Pope, "is a class of business which has hitherto been more or less neglected by fire insurance companies. The nature of the property and its itinerant character combine to put it outside the scope of most of the companies' requirements. The constant moving about also makes it a difficult business to work and adds considerably to the expenses.

"The large field for this business was first brought under my notice by Mr Alf Ball and the late Mr C. Bailey, and I came to the conclusion that, while it would be extremely risky to take occasional lines, it would be found to be workable provided suitable rates could be obtained and a sufficiently large business done to establish a reasonable average.

"After some considerable difficulty in finding an office open to adopt my views of the matter, I finally made arrangements with the Times Insurance Company, of 44, Bedford-row, W.C., under which I was to work up the business within the limits of the United Kingdom as sole agent for that class.

"I at once got to work to get into touch as far as possible with the whole of the travelling showmen in the company, so that they might have the opportunity hitherto practically denied to them of covering their fire risk with the facility enjoyed by every other class of business men.

"I have found this to be no small task, but by dint of perseverance and hard work I have succeeded in getting into direct personal contact with the greater portion of the travellers in east, south, west, and midland counties.

"I have also, through the valuable medium of the showmen's advertisement column in The Era, brought the business directly or indirectly under the notice of most of the travellers in the other parts of the kingdom, from whom I frequently receive letters of enquiry.

"While, however, I have found them as a whole good straightforward men of business, they are, as a rule, not first-class correspondents, and personal interviews are essential to business. I have also found that, notwithstanding the obvious risks they run, having been so long unaccustomed to cover that risk by insurance, they do not always realise the importance of it to the same extent that other business men do, and while some very readily recognise the advantages offered to them, others, for various reasons, put it off to a more convenient season.

"In more than one case this has turned out to be rather an inconvenience to the showman, and proved the truth of the old copy-book proverb 'delays are dangerous' as a fire has occurred while they remained uninsured, proving the moral of another old proverb 'Never put off till to-morrow what you can do to-day.' However, these experiences may and probably will be a warning to others, and in the long run helpful to making the business a success.

"I should like to say that during the considerable intercouse I have had with travellers in all parts of the country the courtesy and cordiality with which I have been received has made my business pleasant and agreeable, and with a continuation of their assistance and co-operation, I am confident that we shall be able to supply a long-felt want to the mutual benefit and satisfaction of both parties. I may add that I have the co-operation and assistance of Mr T. H. Garside, of Manchester, for that district.

"We have already had several claims, one of the heaviest being from Mr Finshell, of Salford, who had his van burnt while travelling along the road. The following is a copy of a letter written by him with reference to his claim:—

Oct. 22, 1904.

Mr T. H. Garside.—

Dear Sir,—I thank you sincerely for the care and trouble you have undertaken in connection with my fire insurance.

The prompt settlement has been very welcome, and I shall do all I can to recommend the Times Insurance Company to my friends.

I again thank you for your exertions on my behalf.

R. J. FINSHELL."

AT the instance of Mr Robert Arthur, a private exhibition of illuminated and coloured pictures of Rome was given at the Coronet Theatre, Notting-hill, on Tuesday afternoon. The photographs, which were presented by Signore Eugenio Inguimbert, were thrown on to a white screen on the stage by a large lantern, and they included much of the fine architecture and many of the unrivalled art treasures of St. Peter's and the Vatican. At times the stage looked as if it was filled with real statues and had suddenly been transformed into a Papal gallery. The entertainment is not only interesting, but of decidedly educational value to young people, who should be taken by their elders to witness this unique exhibition.

AT Marlborough-street Police-court, on Tuesday, Annie York, thirty-five, married, and living in Victoria-road, West Kilburn, was charged, before Mr Denman, with stealing two opera-glasses of the value of £4, belonging to the International Opera-Glass Company. Mr Sims Booth, a director of the company, said that, owing to opera-glasses belonging to the company having been stolen from the Empire Theatre, a watch was kept, and on Oct. 5 the prisoner, who was employed to clean the theatre, was seen to wrench a box containing an opera-glass off the back of one of the seats. That afternoon she was seen to do the same thing, and was given into the custody of Detective-sergeant Mercer, of C division. Altogether thirty-two boxes containing opera-glasses of the value of £64 had been stolen. The prisoner admitted stealing one pair of opera-glasses, but denied the theft that took place on Oct. 5. Mr Denman convicted her on both charges, ordering her to be imprisoned for two months.

"THE ERA" can be obtained at any of Smith and Sons' bookstalls throughout the provinces.

Mr Claude Agnew is a thoroughly effective Talleyrand; Mr Trevor Lowe gives a fine impersonation of the traitorous Marquis De Beaumont, and Mr Alfred Grenville is an efficient General Augereau. Mr Ernest G. Batley gives useful support as Marshal Murat; and a good character sketch is that of the innkeeper Grimaud in the hands of Mr Dennis Bryan. Mr G. Mr Edward Rochelle's Nat Rudder is a thoroughly amusing personage; Mr Arthur Bolton is natural as Tom Hewley, and Miss Margaret Parker as Smudge is infinitely amusing. A more charming Sybil than Miss Caroline Barrett could not be imagined. She invests the part with much natural grace, and quickly arouses the sympathy of the audience.

The clever comedy of Kelly and Gillette is much appreciated; they are undoubtedly smart and worthy of the greatest praise. The Three Grosvenors give a smart performance; Hilton and Hilton, on the bar, are both clever and amusing; the Earles are instrumentalists of great merit; and the Warlocks, the Woelhaffs, acrobats; George Edney, character comedian; and Julian Mack complete the bill.

"A SPARROW, A MOUSE, AND A MAN."

By GEORGE H. R. DABBS, M.D.
London Argus Library of Fiction.

Dr. Dabbs is the author not only of several works of fiction, but has also tried his hand as a playwright. In collaboration with the late Mr Edward Righton, he wrote the three-act play, Our Angels, which was produced at the Vaudeville some years ago, and several other pieces, including Dante, The Dreamers, and Punchinello, &c. "A Sparrow, a Mouse, and a Man" is described as "A Study in Solitude." The story is told by a convict, a young man who once held a good position, and who does not deny that his sentence is a just one. But in his cell he is not alone; a strange friendship exists between the convict and two little creatures—a bird and a mouse. This is how it came about:—

"I was always a lover of animals, and so the mouse found me and the sparrow came to me, and I tamed them both easily. The mouse sleeps near my ear and the sparrow sits by my small table, and these two creatures of the kingdom of nature believe in me. They almost redeem my self-respect. But seven years is a long time, and perhaps they will die and leave me lonely again. Perhaps. They have given me a fright, each of them, before now. Once the mouse hid in my clothing and came out while I was at work, and once in the fields the sparrow hopped on to my shoulder. The warder in charge tried to catch them and kill them, and I, in an agony of fear, could not show that I knew them. You may, in prison, have what foes you like, but you must not have a friend."

The convict was an only son, who was punished, petted, and spoilt by his father, who, however, gave him no profession. They quarrelled, and he left his father's house one moonlight night never to return. He called on the family solicitor, who, having heard his story, agreed to advance him enough to live on until he attained the age of twenty-one, when he would have an income of £300 a year. The young man made his way to London, and joined a drawing-class. He had ability as an artist, and many admired his work.

"Among those who looked at my work was a little dealer, a cunning, despicable rogue he was, and he, pandering to my love of dissipation, induced me to become his imitative artist of the works of other men. I soon became an arch-copyist in oils and water-colours, and he soon became the arch-distributor of my work as 'originals.' And for a time the ignoble fraud succeeded. But one day it failed, and he only just escaped the criminal law. He escaped by the aid of a clever attorney, and the odium—no other punishment—fell upon my shoulders. But from that association I date my downfall. There is always a moment, if we look back, when we are at our zenith and our Nadir; there is always, in moral derogation, an instant when the noble or ignoble choice is ours—when we choose the good angel to live with us, or give our hand to the bad angel. And, though my greater error did not come for some years after this time, the seed was sown then of the implacable future whose harvest I am reaping now with the sickle of sorrow in the autumn twilight of my earthly hope."

The prisoner communes with his two little faithful friends whom he names Gabriel (the mouse) and Christabel (the sparrow), speaking aloud to them his inmost thoughts as if they had the understanding of human beings. There is a touch of pathos in this curious companionship; and the interest of the story is maintained by the unravelling of a murder mystery and the detection of the real culprit.

FUNERAL OF THE VICTIMS OF THE NORTH SEA OUTRAGE.

The bodies of the two Fishermen killed by the Russians in the dastardly outrage in the North Sea were laid to rest in the Western Cemetery, Hull, at five o'clock in the afternoon. The photograph shows the long procession winding through the Cemetery. In the first hearse were the remains of Captain Smith, followed by numerous carriages containing his sorrowing relations and friends and various visitors, among whom was the Russian Vice-Consul. Next there is a good view of the hearse containing the body of the third hand, Leggott, and this again is followed by a procession of carriages. Towards the rear of the procession is the band of the Royal Ancient Order of Buffaloes, of which order Captain Smith was a distinguished Member. Another view shows the arrival of the coffin at the beautifully-decorated grave. The coffin is borne on the shoulders of eight men, who reverently carry it to the grave-side and lower it into the place prepared for it.
Although taken so late in the afternoon, the film is of very fair quality and conveys an excellent impression of this sad scene.

THE NORTH SEA OUTRAGE.

The picture opens with a panoramic view of the Fleet of Crippled Trawlers lying in the harbour at Hull, with numbers of officials and others inspecting the damage done. Following this are a number of snap-shots of the vessels seen at closer range, showing the jagged holes torn by shot and shell in the sides and fittings of the boats. One vessel has a large rent just below the water-line, but the hole was cleverly plugged by the captain and the vessel saved from foundering. A close view of the Mino and the Moulmein shows several members of the crew on deck. The Admiral of the Fleet is seen discussing the disaster with some friends. At the end is a fine portrait of the youth Smith, son of the Captain of the Crane, who was decapitated by a shell. And, lastly, a portrait group of the bereaved Smith family—mother, son, and several children.
Length, 150ft. Price, 5d. per foot—£3 2s. 6d.

A TRIP TO PARIS.

SCENE I. THE TRIPPER PACKS his portmanteau with the few things requisite and necessary for a trip to the "gay city."
SCENE II. OUTSIDE CHARING-CROSS RAILWAY STATION.—The Tripper is late for the train, and is hurrying as fast as he can for the booking-office.
SCENE III. AT THE BOOKING-OFFICE.—A very stout lady is taking her ticket, while a string of impatient passengers wait behind her. She insists upon going out the wrong way and so delays everybody. The Tripper just manages to get his ticket and jump into the train before it starts.
SCENE IV. ON THE RAILWAY BRIDGE.—The Continental Train starts, and the Tripper waves farewell to his friends.
SCENE V. VARIOUS VIEWS FROM THE WINDOW of the train as it speeds on its way to Dover. The Tripper is too excited to sit still, and constantly leans out of the window in front.
SCENE VI. AT DOVER.—The Continental Train arrives, and the Tripper hastens to the steamer.
SCENE VII. THE STEAMER ALONGSIDE THE ADMIRALTY PIER.—The tripper goes on board.
SCENE VIII. THE STEAMER UNDER WAY.—The foamy water behind the paddle box.
SCENE IX. VIEW ON DECK OF THE STEAMER.—The Tripper is offered a cigarette, but is not feeling inclined for luxuries at the time.
SCENE X. ARRIVAL AT CALAIS.—After a short dispute about his ticket the Tripper goes ashore.
SCENE XI. THE ARRIVAL AT PARIS.—Panoramic View of the Place de l'Opera. The Tripper buys picture postcards.
SCENE XII. THE PLACE DE LA CONCORDE.—If you want to know the way ask a gendarme.
SCENE XIII. THE ARC DE TRIUMPHE.
SCENE XIV. THE CHAMPS ELYSEES ON SUNDAY.—The Tripper buys a gas balloon, but unfortunately loses it.
SCENE XV. AT A CAFE.
This is a Film of continued and sustained interest, being a complete representation of a trip abroad linked up into one harmonious whole in a new and quite original manner. Every scene is of splendid photographic quality, and the whole subject forms a picture of unusual beauty and interest.

PROVINCIAL THEATRICALS

ABERDARE.

NEW THEATRE.—Manager, Mr Z. Andrews.—Mr Morton Powell's company is here this week in Bigamy. Mr Colin Hazlewood is conspicuous as Charles Dresden. Mr Ernest J. Fare is decidedly good as Lionel Craven. Mr E. S. Earle is a capable Edgar Craven. Mr Chas. Burdon is a manly Frank Merrivale. Mr Fred Moule as Rufus Cherrybull and Mr Francis Merle as Polyphemus Voltaire are amusing. Miss Lydia Mannington is an excellent Dido, Miss Elsie Capel shows much power as Sylvia Dresden, and it would be difficult to find a better exponent of Diana De Courcelle than Miss Alwynne Ermon.

ABERDEEN.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Managing-Director, Mr Robert Arthur; General Manager, Mr Eade Montefiore; Acting-Manager, Mr H. C. Cavanah.—The D'Oyly Carte répertoire company opened a week's engagement on Monday with The Gondoliers. The performance was singularly spirited and successful. Mr Pacie Ripple as Marco is the new principal tenor. He possesses a voice of exceedingly agreeable quality, and scored greatly with several of his songs, particularly with "Take a pair of sparkling eyes." He is admirably supported by Mr Albert Kavanagh as Guiseppe. Mr C. H. Workman showed inimitable humour as the Duke, and Mr Fred Billington was, as usual, singularly successful in the part of Don Alhambra. Miss Norah Maguire is as charming as ever with her rich ringing voice in the character of Gianetta. Miss Jessie Rose had a delightful part in Tessa, and the impersonation of the Duchess by Miss Theresa Rassan was a remarkably dignified piece of work. Miss Bessie Mackenzie, a young lady with a voice of great flexibility and power, made a most favourable impression by her singing and acting as Casilda. The chorus work was marked by great firmness, the conductor, Mr T. Silver, evidently having his forces well in hand. The Mikado was presented on Tuesday, and other pieces that follow are Trial by Jury, Patience, and The Yeomen of the Guard.

PALACE THEATRE, LIMITED.—General Manager, Mr Ernest Sheldon.—The Watson Quartet are remarkably successful with their drawing-room entertainment; and another delightful turn is contributed by Miss Bessie Goodwin and her piccaninnies. Miss Ruby Bijou, an exceedingly clever dancer, makes a great success; and the musical eccentricities of Kloof and Ramsay are keenly enjoyed. The Two Graces, vocalists and dancers, do not belie their name; and the Florodora Girls are seen to the best advantage in their latest success Rival Sweethearts. The Darrell Troupe win enthusiastic applause by their graceful performance; and the Courtney Combination appear in a highly amusing farce, The Doctor. All the other turns are appreciated.

ABERTILLERY.

THEATRE METROPOLE.—Lessees, Messrs Arthur Carlton and Sam Duckworth; General and Resident Manager, Mr Geo. W. Ventom.—Messrs Alfred Paumier and Walter Howard's company is here in the romantic play Why Men Love Women. Mr Alfred Paumier gives an admirable impersonation of Gerald Fielding, and the part of Serge Staniloff is well sustained by Mr S. Herbert Humber. Mr W. S. Hardy does good work in the rôle of Tommy Fitzherbert. Mr Edwin Lever scores as the Maharajah, as also does Mr R. Calvert Hawe as the Rev. Edward Grey. Miss Annie Saker proves herself an exceptionally charming actress in the portrayal of Violet Livingstone. A fair amount of comedy is introduced, Mr Harwood Roberts appearing with success as Orlando Figgins, ably supported by Miss Marie Glynne as Matilda Figgins and Miss Queenie Nigel and Miss Violet Godfrey as Birdie Summertop and Baby Winterbotham respectively. Miss Beatrice Sinclair as Muriel Zoluski is an artiste of no mean ability, and the remaining parts in are safe hands.

ACCRINGTON.

PRINCE'S THEATRE.—Proprietor, Mr J. B. Ormerod; Acting-Manager, Mr J. E. Barnes.—Mr J. Gar Kiddie's company is here again this week with A Little Coquette. Miss Lizzie Payne plays the title-rôle with all the dash necessary, and scores a decided success. Miss Flo Warner must be complimented on her impersonation of Robin Adair, Miss Nellie Butt is equal to the part of Charlie Crowquill, Mr J. W. Groves gives a diverting impersonation of Ann Teeke, and Messrs Clarence and Bell keep the house in a good humour as Pipe Clay and Sharpshoot. Mr George Hestor is exceedingly funny as Simon Scrapps. Mr E. H. Bertram is good Captain Narcissus. Peter Longpull is capably played by Mr L. J. Headlam. Gabriel Grabb is in the capable hands of Mr Forsyth Bruce, who is conspicuously successful.

HIPPODROME.—Lessee, Mr J. Mill; Manager, Mr T. W. Moyes.—The bill here includes the Achmed Ibrahim Troupe of Arabs, who go through some wonderful leaping and tumbling acrobatism. Some clever work is done by Charles Vandyke and company in a sketch, Nicodemus A comedian of more than ordinary merit is Billy Elliott, who fairly brings down the house. G. Gillbey, the fireman on the ladder, is a clever turn; the Two Wills are good in their line; and Miss Flo Hill is chic and neat in her work. Bill Baily completes an excellent bill-of-fare.

ALDERSHOT.

THEATRE ROYAL.—Lessee and Manager, Mr Clarence Saunes; Resident-Manager, Mr George E. Williams.—A Path of Thorns, a powerful play, is being played in an excellent manner by the Hardie and Von Leer company. A capital impersonation of the Rev. Frank Selby is contributed by Mr Cyril W. Mackay; Mr Claude King's is a talented portrayal of John Edmunds; and as Sam Mr Alfred Lester is good. Mr Cecil Du Gué is clever as Jonas Deane; whilst the necessary amount of villainy is introduced skilfully by Mr J. H. Booth (Jim Price) and Mr Walter L. Rignold (Ratty). The difficult rôle of Nellie is ably played by Miss Stanley Burt; and from Miss Violet Luddington comes a successful embodiment of Bessie Edmunds. Miss Amy Rogerson's clever acting as Jane Adelaide is marked; and the talented portrayal of Constance Howard by Miss Mary Raby is particularly noticeable. A promising little actress is Mabel May, and she sings and dances with excellent results. Others who do well are Messrs C. Mayor Cooke, Harry F. Wright, A. C. Clark, J. Chevington, and Dunston Haye.

ASHTON-UNDER-LYNE.

THEATRE ROYAL.—Sole Owner and Manager, Mr Chas. Revill; Acting-Manager, Mr Armstrong Fairbairn.—An Actor's Romance is being played this week at the theatre by Mr Cecil Barth's company. The company is an all-round efficient one. Prominent figures are Mr Guy Hastings as the actor-hero, Miss Constance Elgin as his evil genius, Miss Bertha Northam as Louise (the true and devoted wife), Mr Percy Marmont as the infatuated lover of the female villain, Mr Ernest Rushton as the leader of a gang of thieves, Miss May Charteris as Dottie (the charming soubrette), and Little Marie Ada Dowsing as the child, Phyllis.

NEW HIPPODROME.—Sole Proprietor, Mr Chas. Revill; Director of Entertainments, Mr F. Willmot.—The reputation of the New Hippodrome cannot fail to be enhanced by the excellence of this week's programme, which includes Alma Obrey, Australian comedienne, who turns her vocal abilities to the best account; Bob Baxter, whom the programme very aptly describes as "a curious one;" Beatie Foster, a charming descriptive songstress; the Harrison Bros., comedians and patterers; Tom Owen, the original Welsh comedian; Chas. R. Whittle, comic; Whitney, eccentric character vocalist; and the Violas, in their mysterious act. The Cinématograph shows some interesting pictures.

BARROW-IN-FURNESS.

ROYALTY THEATRE AND OPERA HOUSE.—Lessee and Manager, Mr Hugh Robertson; Resident-Manager, Mr George Stone.—Mr Fred Karno's company, in Saturday to Monday, is here this week. Mr Fred Kitchin as John Willie Jaggs is entirely successful and amusing; Miss Aggie Morris plays with much vivacity as Clorinda Blake; Miss Gladys White is a pleasing Violet Blake; Mr Frank Haylett acts and sings well as Tom Freeman; Mr Robert Rivers is a capable Mr Blake; and the Camille Dancing Girls also contribute successfully.

TIVOLI.—Sole Lessee and Manager, Signor Pepi; Stage-Manager, Mr Tom Whiting.—Goldman, Holles, and company top the bill here this week with a very pretty little musical comedy mélange. The Great Zaid, assisted by the Beautiful Orienta, gives a marvellous performance on the rings, and Victor Newman, the mimic, cleverly submits his various impersonations. Hector and Paulus are a pair of clever comedy acrobats; Eric Graham is pleasing as a Cockney coster; Fred Clements sings funny ditties; and Millie Harris gives her songs in first-class style.

BATH.

THEATRE ROYAL.—Lessee and Manager, Mr Egbert Lewis; Acting-Manager, Mr Lewis A. Long.—Mr Lewis Calvert and Mr Herbert Ross's company is paying a first visit in the domestic play Sunday. First honours are carried off by Miss Marie Polini, who, in the title-rôle, gives a delightful impersonation of the high-spirited and honest Western girl. Her love scenes with Mr W. Edwin Holloway as Colonel Brinthorpe were admirably acted. Mr Arthur Willoughby as the family friend, Tom Oxley, is another capital study. A quartet of gentlemen who play into each others' hands with the happiest results are Mr St. Clair Bayfield (Towser), Mr David Curtis (Davy), Mr Alfred P. Phillips (Lively), and Mr Arthur Somers (Jackey), their "confidential chats" causing much amusement and pleasure. Miss Maude Henderson makes a capital Mrs Naresby, her clear enunciation of her lines being particularly noteworthy. Miss Dorothy Gordon is duly reserved as the Nun, and Mr John Holloway does all that is required as the unmanly Arthur Brinthorpe.

PALACE THEATRE.—Proprietor, Mr Frank Macnaghten; Acting-Manager, Mr W. Trussell.—Starring here with great success are Captain Woodward's seals and sea lions, the training of which is truly astounding. Gintaro, a Japanese juggler and top-spinner, is watched with interest, and gets his reward by hearty applause. The excellent and expressive ballad singing of Arthur Aldridge is accorded due recognition. The Two Weirs, duettists and dancers, in their newest hit, The Bootblack and the Flower Girl, are favourites. Musical Silvo once again returns to make his usual success. Chummie La Mara, burlesque artiste, is as smart and goey as ever. Will Sergeant, comedian, has his admirers. Dora Lyric, comedienne, continues to sustain her former prestige. Jemmy Shields, the one-legged comedian and dancer, opens the programme.

BARNSLEY.

THEATRE ROYAL.—Manager, Mr A. C. Mitchell.—Messrs H. J. Callan and Wentworth Croke's company, by arrangement with Mr Tom B. Davis, is presenting the musical comedy Florodora. The cast includes Mr Arthur Lenville, a most humorous Tweedlepunch; Mr C. Young Fixott, an admirable Cyrus Gilfain; Mr William Everard, a praiseworthy Frank Abercoed; and Mr J. Graham Huntley, a good Captain Donegal. Miss May Yates is a winsome Angela; Lady Holyrood is a very pleasing impersonation by Miss Dorothy Sephton; and Miss Violet Bronson makes a charming Dolores.

PUBLIC HALL.—Manager, Mr O. P. De Mirlmorde.—Grand opera, as played by Mr J. W. Turner and company, is always acceptable to Barnsley audiences. The week has opened with The Bohemian Girl. Mr F. J. Hargrave is excellent as Thaddeus; Mr Tom Griffiths is seen to advantage as Count Arnhelm; Devilshoof is a fine delineation by Mr Sydney Clifford; Mr R. Cummings is responsible for Florestein; Miss Ethel Locker does full justice to Arline; the Gypsy Queen is characteristically played by Miss Beatrice Hill; and Buda is made the most of by Miss Maud Esdale. The Puritan's Daughter, Il Trovatore, The Waterman, Faust, and Maritana are in the week's répertoire.

BELFAST.

THEATRE ROYAL.—Managing-Director, Mr Fred W. Warden; Acting-Manager, Mr James M'Cann.—The successful Negro musical comedy In Dahomey is the attraction here this week, and is capably presented by a unique American coloured company under the management of Mr Henry Hockaday. Mr Dan Avery in the rôle of Rareback Pinkerton kept the house in roars of laughter with his funny songs and whimsicalities; and Mr Charles Hart was no less humorous in the part of Shylock Homestead, his rendering of the well-known "Jonah Man" being one of the hits of the evening. Mr Norris Smith as the Chief of the Caboceera could not easily be excelled, his fine voice being admired. As Rosetta Lightfoot Miss Pauline Freeman was charming, her vocalism being pleasing, and Mr Pete Hampton as Hamilton Lightfoot was most effective. Miss Stella Hart cleverly acted the part of Mrs Stringer, and Mr Walter Dixon made the most of his opportunities as Hustling Charlie. Mr Leon Williams succeeded admirably in the rôle of George Reader.

PALACE THEATRE OF VARIETIES.—Managing Director, Mr Fred W. Warden; Acting-Manager, Mr John P. Beardmore.—Another fine bill has been presented here, the chief attraction being provided by Mr Frank Byron, a smart comedian, and the charming soubrette, Miss Louise Langdon, who have been successful in The Dude Detective. Mr Laurie Wylie's novel mannikins have been accorded a capital reception, and Mr Thomas E. Finglass, assisted by Miss Grania Herbert, stages a very attractive entertainment entitled "Let me be your slave" Carlton, the well-known manipulator of cards, furnishes striking proof of his dexterity, his performance being decidedly clever; and a daring trapeze act by Miss Lilian Sivado deserves all the praise bestowed on it. The Dandies appear to great advantage in their refined act, their vocalism and dancing being especially praiseworthy. The Dunlops are capital comedy cyclists, and Miss Amy Anderson's coster scena forms a big attraction. Mr Joe Archer, comedian, also appears.

EMPIRE THEATRE OF VARIETIES, LIMITED.—General Manager, Mr Frank Allen; Acting-Manager, Mr Charles Brock.—The chief attraction at this beautiful hall is supplied by the Hoopers, whose funny juggling act has been very successful. Mr and Mrs Edward Lucas appear to advantage in their several studies from Dickens. The xylophone performance by Baker and Balfe is certainly very smart, and the capital baritone voice of Mr Leo Stormont has afforded much pleasure. A remarkably clever dancing exhibition has been furnished by Espinosa and Neilson, and Austin and Cowan, vocal entertainers, make a pronounced hit. The Two Romers are the happy possessors of tuneful voices, and their selections have delighted all. Miss Beatrice Willey, balladist, also appears.

NEW ALHAMBRA THEATRE OF VARIETIES.—General Manager, Mr Henry T. Downs.—The Four Herberts, comedy acrobats, top the bill, and their clever act has been accorded quite an ovation. The startling acrobatic act by the Bros. Donar forms an important feature, and Leighton and Mona furnish an attractive performance, their piano act being remarkably brilliant. IMPERIAL HIPPODROME AND CIRCUS.—Proprietors, Messrs Carter and Bosco; Manager, Mr Irving Bosco; Assistant-Manager, Mr George Dobler.—This favourite place of amusement reopened on Monday its second season with a programme which is certainly calculated to please even the most tastidious taste. A decided innovation, at least in circus business in this city, is the introduction of two houses nightly, and it remains to be seen how it will prosper at this establishment. Everything possible will, no doubt, be done by Messrs Bosco and Dobler to make the system a success, and with their experience the result should be eminently satisfactory. Clown Caban headed the list of novelties presented on Monday, and his wonderful ponies and dogs perform the most remarkable feats amidst scenes of enthusiasm. An acrobatic performance of a daring and startling nature has been presented by the Four Rosaires, who quite uphold their high reputation. The Great Sloan Family are very clever equestrians; and the triple bar act by the Three Boleros has been loudly cheered. Mr Roy Ralston, sailor baritone, assisted by Miss Francis, sings several songs admirably; and a performance of no little merit is that supplied by the Three Saletos, marvellous acrobats. Other attractions are supplied by the Sisters Etherdos on the rocking ladders; Princess Annie, a charming and clever equestrienne; and the new Hippodrome pictures. The funny clowns, Handy Andy, Billy Haydon, and Ping Pong, create roars of laughter with their droll antics, and undoubtedly the entire performance on Monday was highly successful. Mr V. C. White's efficient orchestra also deserves a meed of praise.

THEATRE ROYAL.—Proprietors, Messrs Howard and Wyndham, Limited; Acting-Manager, Mr Walter Hollister. — Under the direction of Mr Frederick Mouillot the successful comic opera, My Lady Molly, pays a return visit to this theatre this week. On Monday there was a capital audience, who accorded the piece a hearty greeting. Miss Decima Moore appeared in her original rôle of Alice Coverdale, and charmed the house by her dainty and refined singing and sparkling comedy acting, her graceful dancing being also much admired. Miss Beatrice Edwards, the Lady Molly, gave a vivacious representation of the part, and her rich, mellow voice was heard to advantage in several charming songs. Miss Amy Cooper made a praiseworthy Madeline Mirabeau, and Miss Lottie Crawford a piquante Hester, the latter dancing neatly. Mr Harry T. Davies sang with feeling and acted with spirit as Captain Harry Romney; Lionel Bland was excellently played by Mr Ernest Mozer, Mr Augustus Cramer was highly successful as the bluff and hearty Sir Miles Coverdale, Mr John Tellac Callum made an entertaining Micky O'Dowd, singing and dancing with unflagging good humour.

LYCEUM THEATRE.—Proprietors, Messrs Howard and Wyndham, Limited; General-Manager, Mr G. T. Minshull.—The welcome engagement of Sir Henry Irving and his company commenced on Monday with a representation of The Merchant of Venice, that gave unqualified pleasure to a very large and enthusiastic audience. Sir Henry, who had a worthy reception on coming forward as Shylock, was also recalled and loudly cheered at the close of every act, and had a marked ovation at the end, when he said a few words of grateful thanks to his faithful Edinburgh friends. He had admirable support from Messrs Gerald Lawrance James Hearn, Frank Tyars, Charles Dodsworth, H. B. Stanford, and John Archer, the latter a well remembered old-time favourite. Miss Edith Wynne Matheson as Portia contributed a performance of rare power and beauty to an otherwise strong cast, and made a notable impression all through the trial scene. Miss Grace Hampton was a sprightly Nerissa, and Mrs Cecil Raleigh an effective Jessica. On Tuesday evening Becket drew another brilliant house, and introduced Sir Henry in one of the most perfect of the many historical portraits he has given to the stage during his illustrious career. Mr Gerald Lawrence played the tempestuous Henry II. with the requisite spirit. Miss Maud Fealy gave a charming performance of Rosamond, and Mrs Cecil Raleigh an intensely vivid presentment of Queen Eleanor. Waterloo and The Bells were given on Wednesday, and The Lyons Mail was presented on Thursday.

COOKE'S ROYAL CIRCUS.—Proprietor, Mr John Henry Cooke. — The reopening of Mr Cooke's equestrian season has been causing unusual excitein this part of the town, and on Monday there was an overflowing house, numbers being unable to obtain seats. In the interval the circus has been tastefully redecorated in blue and gold, and electricity now forms a feature in the lighting. A high-class programme had been arranged, and everybody was delighted with the entertainment, which was carried through with remarkable spirit. The daring feats of Miss Powell and Mons. Henry in their acrobatic display on two bare-backed horses were warmly applauded, and Miss Ernestine Rosa Cooke introduced Kentucky Beau, a horse that gives an imitation of the cake-walk, the lady receiving a double recall at the close. M. De Gracia's elephants acted as barbers and waiters, and took part in a game of cricket with wonderful intelligence, the spectacle being decidedly amusing. The equestrianism of Miss Eva was much admired, and the Moxon Family appeared in a turn that embraced music, dancing, and acrobatics with notable success. La Belle Rose made a hit with her clever aerial performance, and the Sisters Warner were also cordially received. Horton and Linder, the Yoricks, and the Brothers Leotard gave excellent turns; and a number of Bioscope pictures were also shown. The clowns were in excellent form, and Talberto was more than ordinarily amusing in his fun without words.
